

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

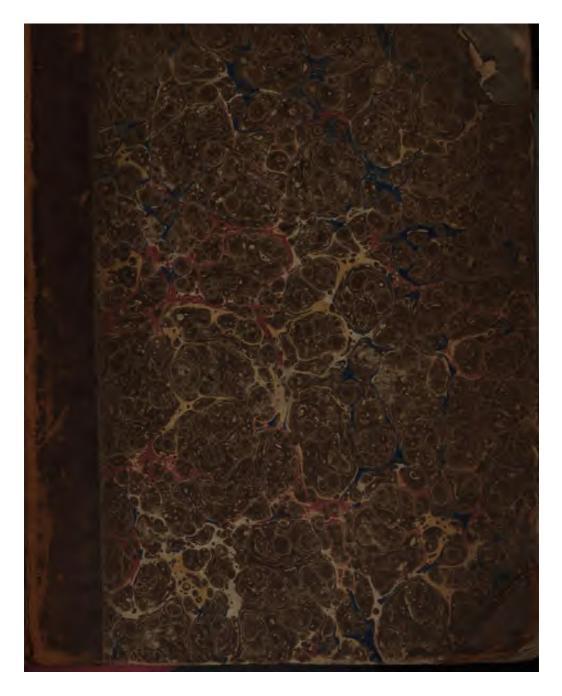

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

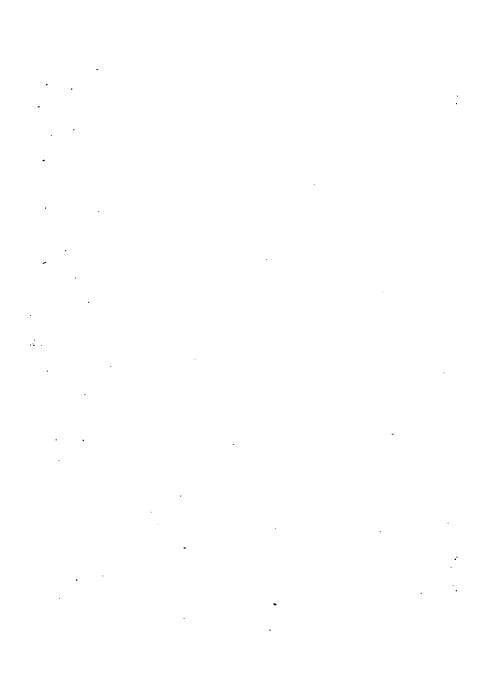

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at http://books.google.com/

S PANIS PILGRIME:

OR,
AN ADMIRABLE DISCOVE
of a Romish Catholick B.

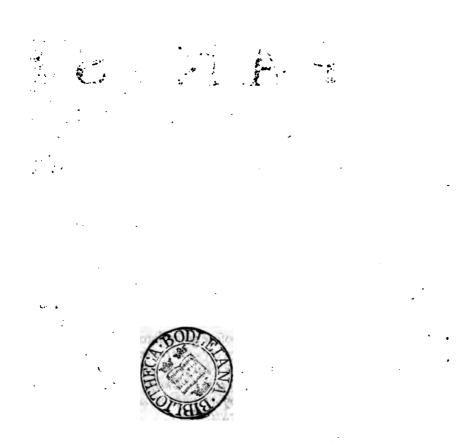

Shewing how necessary and important it is, see Protestant Kings, Princes, and Potentates of rope; to make warre upon the King of Spatowne Countrey: Also where, and by what meanes, he Dominions may be inuaded and easily ruinated; as the English heretofore going into Spaine, did constraine the Kings of (astile to demand peace in all humility, and what great losse it has beene, and still is to all Christendome, for default of putting the same in execution.

Wherein hee makes apparant by good and euident reason fallible arguments, most true and certaine Histories, and notal amples, the right way, and true meanes to resist the violence the Spanish King, to breake the course of his designes, to beate downe his pride, and to ruinate his puissance.

LONDON

Printed by B. A. and are to be fold by Thomas Archer at his in Popes head Alley, ouer against the figne of the Horse-shooe, 1625.

243. 9. 15.

THE EPISTLE OF THE French Translator, to all the Protestant Kings, Princes, and Potentates in the Christian World.

Most excellent Princes.

T was my hap to contract amity with certaine Gentlemen of Arragon, and other Spaniards (not Castillians, for to them I wot not how to carry any affection, which should exceede the prescript rule of the Go. spell) of whom I understood many things touching matters of State, which were to me firange and worknowne: by reason that there were among ft them some personages exceedingly well learned; and most post conversant and expert in all Histories, and notably well scene and practifed in the affaires of the world. There was one abone the rest in their company, a man of great spirit indgement, and experience who had seene a great part of Europe, and shawing beene for a long time in Portugall) had dealt and conversed with the Portugals, whose Language he spake naturally, and had read all the Histories of that Realme, and was sometimed with all their affaires, and knew them all

Jo particularly, that I did greatly wonder at it. For in things that were to come, I found him in manner of a Prophet: in so much that for the vinacity and quicknesse of his spirit, and the long experience which hee hath bad, be feemeth to me to have as great knowledge in things to come, as if be faw them present before his eyes. He made proofe onto me by many reasons (which ded not onely plainely connince my opinion, but did as it were bind me band and foote) that thefe voyages, and others of like kinae, would never draw with them any other profit, nor serue to any other purpose, then to waken the fleeping dogge, and to re-enforce the comme enemie. Now considering that Don Philip King of Castill hath a Councell, the most choise and excellent, such as mener Prince in this world had a better, his ferustors most loyall and faithfull, great forces, and abundance of treasure, wpon the which all other things doe depend: and yet notwithstanding all this, hee doth not leave daily to cause divers Bookes to be imprinted in his favour and defence, I doe therefore defire to have drawne from this learned and worthy person some thing written with his owne hand, which I might present water your Maiesties: and to this end did I divers times make request wato him, but I could never get him to yeeld or condescend thereunto. Wherefore bethinking with my selfe, that as ponerty, griefe, and melanches he, doth bury, and (as it were) kill the spirits of a man. so the commodities of this life, contentment and cheereful nesse, doth renine and quicken them, I determined because I saw him sad, penfine, and melancholicke, by reason of bis exile and misfortunes out of his owne Countrey, to procure his pleasure and contentment knowing that by this meanes

I might obtaine the accomplishment of my desire, I did therefore (el open mi gates and my House ont o him, I presenied him with my Purse, and made him partner of my Corne: I cherished and entertained him fur many dayes. and (for love of him) (ome other of his company, And by this curtefie Imade him so beholding tome, that afterwards having many times held dispute and conference together. I caused him in the end to take his Pen in band. Theseupon did he compose in the Castillian Tongue, this Discourse, which he entitled Trattado paranætico: and he presented it uniome. The which when I had read, a most strange admiration or astonishment did raushme: for that I never fam (I will not fay in fo little a Volume) but not enen in great Bookes, (o many curiofities reported, so many and diuers Histories, things so secret and particular, admonishments fo necessary to be embraced, nor counsels so inft to be followed. And knowing perfectly the excellency of this worke, and how greatly important it would be to be seene of your Maieflies, and by the Kings, Princes, Potentates, and Common weales of Europe. And albeit I know my stile to be rude and barbarous, yet fuch was my ambition (I confesse mine owne instructly) that I was not willing that any other should have the pleasure in doing it. In some places I bane augmented it: holding it so to be needfull, for the bester and more cleere under standing of the History. Touching the originall, I thought it reason not to abridge or cut off any part thereof. I most humbly befeech, in regard of your most Christian Maiesties, to receive it with that good affestion, which Princes owesh to their Subicsts: who for his fernice, will not esteeme to hazard the losse of all that hee possessable : much lesse to make himselfe uncapable for the obtaining obtaining of that which of right is due unto him, and who for the good and honour of his Countrey, will frend his life most freely and willingly. God preserve and blesse the most Christian persons of your Maicsties, with so great abundance of spirituall graces, and assist you and make you to prosper with so many rishes of temporall blessings, as is possible to his dimine Maicstie. Amen.

The most faithfull Subject of the most Christian King of France, and loyall Servant to the most wise and excellent King of England,

1. D. Dralymant.

The Publisher to the Reader.

Riendly Reader, thou hast in this little Pamphlet an incomparable treasure, a rich store-house and magazin sull of precious speeches, true Histories, rare examples, linely reasons, and wholsome counsels: the which if their Maiesties, and the Kings, Princes, Potentates, and Common-weales of Christendome would embrace. follow, and put in execution, without doubt they should foone obtaine and find a medicine for fo many mischiefes, a remedy for so great and continual afflictions and intollerable trauels, wherewith their Subjects have for so many yeeres wrastled and contended. And I dare assure them. that by observing the adule here given them, they shall preferue their Estates in time to come from all danger: for even as the great fishes doe persecute and devoure the small and little ones; so in like manner those neighbours which are most mighty and puissant, doe despoile and consume the athers who are of lesse pullance. Now we know that there are two especial reasons for which the Authour hath prolonged and drawne out at length this his Discourse, enriching it with Histories so singular, and beautifying it with fuch rare authorities and examples. The former is: for that. as he hath endeuoured lively to depaint vnto vs our enemy. and to make vs know the natural disposion of those Nations, of whom we have great cause to take good heed; seeing that all that which he hath spoken, doth set forward this his intent and purpose, he saw it would not be any inconvenience, to vie therein some prolixity. It a man by compact, as bound bound thereto by another, or ni riso whe proper motion and free will, and more carlo leve vould indertake a royage of formethree or four energies, not taking any time prefixed nor limited for di gardi inere il woni car ne widlantbe unto lun, nin lus pullagi pi li ji ji li me Ginlens where hemas regreate and refer his lifet, if in green and and wearifomentafication with Soil end in Makers reads this Treatifeat your pleashee, will to be wile reconstition, and taka your de eght in in eigheite oud wie befolg flowings and en ei ment, i meine eine ein eine eine Vou nei geschaft in no manthat does regarded the subject to prolimity of this Trear to, is for that the And presidence not necellor to hand a transcription of acts perfors and finite. Not obesited is on over the mean of them froudbreens ou did not reger in devel mitaire done well grass and all mary burns and and victoris, blime and report a from the condition of the course were fhall find the fart carrier which her a malary for 147: in the productive remark to go to be got obserte, and all as receive to the period of a discovery that it is not a second of the period of the pe Fortratig promotige, måt for aller i diskat och da detalente explate el la constante de la capacidade. Touris the market in turmi, ingresch i de la deserva de la compania de la compaña. Compania de la compania de la compania de la compaña de la compania de la compaña de la compaña de la compaña d gerfator portiniaritis itias peril of the cities to be Authour to mittine in. And to the little me part an of this ogenion a rhad in is not against seal agong solutions worked. reals and ricus of tome one parties at pe the, which being mue, may be made anowne to every man, elp.e.a. when the knowledge thereof hay red and to the great good and Senent reute weite pable e. B. ett en ett an ere bit me कारणबर्ग १८६१२ माने व की हुएएवं ए कारणबर आगावण रे एक हैं। है, pall things contained in this Treatise.

He'reasons which have mooned Philip king of Casti	le to Stirre up Warre in Fraunce: and what opinion he hat
the French. pag	e 2.
The league in Fraunce imitateth that in Spaine, in the y	eare
1 40 7. yaq	7e 4.
Philip agrainst his promise, causeth the captaine Anthon	e to
hanged,	4.
What paines and labour Philip hath taken, to procure war	rea_ gainst the most Christian king Henrie the 3 deceassed the meane of the king now being and of the promises W
he hath made unto his Maiestie for that purpose.	,6,
The great desire which the late king Henrie the third ha
haue fet Portugall at libertie.	8.
That Portugall is the cause of the warre in Fraunce.	8. is
How necessarie and important a thing it is, that the en- haue warre made opon him in his owne countrie.	8.
What the nature and difficultion is of the natural Spania 15.
What forrow and griefe the Princes and Lords of Spain take to scethe inuasion end vsurpation of Portugall:	and n hat desire they have to see it deliucrer.	17.
The malice of the Castilian nation, and their disloyalty ago	ainst · sirangers, when they have any occasion offered them to d neere and rule ouer them.	19.
The enmitie and hatred of the Castilians against the P	ortu.
gals.	22.
The loyaltie and fidelitie of the Portugal.	24.
The sanse why Portugall was not restored to her libertie i	nthe
yeare 1 589, when the king Don Anthonio drew the	English into Portugall: with a true declaration of that
The areas richer found at Tichon	27.
The great riches found et Lisbon.	29.

bound thereto by another, or of his owne proper motion and free will, and vpon curiofity, would undertake a voyage of some three or source leagues, not having any time prefixed nor limited for dispatch thereof, what harme would it be vnto him, if in his paffige he doe find force Girdens where he may recreate and refresh himselfe, from the trauell and wearisomenesse of the way? So doe you my Masters reade this Treatifeat your pleasure, vse it for your recreation, and take your delight in the sweets odours of her flowres and pleasant posses. You need e make no great hast, there is no manthat doth vige youthereto. A ficond reason of the prolixity of this Treatife, is, for that as the Author is driven of necessity to handle the verture and the vices of diners perfons and fundry Nations: so his will was, that each of them should have his due defear: the good and those that have done well, praise and honour; but the entil and vitious, blame and reprehention. In the end of this Creatife you shall find the explication which he promiseth, Fol 143; in the which there are many things both of great currently, and also as necessary to the marter in hand as any of the selt. Forthat in knowledge, vinderflanding, and experience, nec doth farre exceed me, as his worke doth thew apparantly. Touching the which briefly, I dare not affirme any thing, but this, that each word of his is a sentence, and that each Latence containeth many. I mult confesse, that to some perionsir, particular, his Treat se will be ill accepted : but what remedy? he hath spoken but the truth, and what he affirmeth he proweth, and hee aliedgeth nothing without his Authour to inftifie it. And truly I for my part am of this opinion: that it is not against reason, to publish the wickednexe and vices of some one particular person, which being true, may be made knowne to every man, especially when the knowledge thereof may redound to the great good and benefit of the weale publice. But to come to an end, let me entreaty ou to take in good part that which I have faid.

pall things contained in this Treatife.

He reasons which have mooned Philip king of (astile to I Stirre up warre in Fraunce: and what opinion he
the French.	page 2.
The league in Fraunce imitateth that in Spaine, int
1463.	page 4.
Philip against his promise, causeth the captaine Ant	nonie te
hanged.	4.
What paines and labour Philip bath taken, to procure gainst the most Christian king Henrie the 3 decea the meane of the king now being and of the promis
he hathmade unto his Maiestre for that purpose.	6.
The great desire which the late king Henrie the thir
have fet Portugall at libertie.	8.
That Portugall is the cause of the warre in Fraunce.	8.
How necessarie and important a thing it is, that th
haue warre made opon him in his owne countrie.	8.
What the nature and disposition is of the natural Sp
pige.	15.
What forrow and griefe the Princes and Lords of Sp take to scethe inuation end vsurpation of Portuga nhat desire they have to see it deliverer.	17.
The malice of the Castiliannation, and their disloyalt firangers, when they have any occasion offered them
neere and rule ouer them.	19.
The enmitte and hatred of the Castilians against th	e Portu.
· gals.	22.
The loyaltie and fidelitie of the Portugal.	24.
The sause why Portugall was not restored to her liber yeare 1 589, when the king Don Anthonio drew glish into Portugall: with a true declaration of t
- 446	27.
The great riches found at Lisbon.	. 1
B 3	29. 'I be

	e reason why so many faults of the English.	•	33
Th	at the w ost Christian king,	and the Princes and Pote
· · · ·	of Europe have very great	cause and interest, to bene	ler the j	Portugals from according	with the Castilian.	33.
A	deduction of certains reaso	ins, betweene the Anthon	and a
1	Frenchman, upon the voy	ige Which it behoves by the .	French
t	to make into Spaine, and	what loffer they have had	for de.
.f	fault of putting the same in	execution in times past.	36
W	hat the flate and condition	is of an affailant, and of a	defen dant.		4d.
	hat tyrannie, and crueltie, a is the cause of the ruine an	id destruction of great Esta	t e s and Monarchies.	5 1 . 1 . 1 . 1 . 1	43
7h	e cause wherefore the king	Rodericke lost Spaine,	44.
	bat the English heretofore g gals, did constraine the kin edi tion s (to their great dif tage) they were confirming th the honourable testimoni gainst Spaine.	orce and puissance of Portu from 50.	gau a.
.#2	bere, and by what way Spai	ne may be inuaded, and the	3
	eafily ruinated.		_
	he Portugals most impatie	nt wuhen their honour is	55
	Stion.		56
H	ovo and by what meanes th	e king of Castile hath so ea	alie v.
1	(urped the realms of Portu	call.	57
11	hat and how great the force	of Portugall is: & the neg	livenc of the king Don Anthonic	and of his Counsell.	~ < o.
T	he unlawfull and uniust to	reaties meade by king Phil	ip wit
	Muley Malucco, Whereof	ensued the losse and destru	Étion o
	the king Don Sebaltian:	And how Philip doth rei	ovce d triumph at the prosperitie	of the Turke: and for Wha	it caul
	he forbeareth to hinder th	be Turke from making v	arre i
	Europe, which he may casi	ly dec.	60
		_	Tb

The description of Portugall, with the greatness, rich	hes, and puissance thereof.	65.
King Philip much addicted to Cosmographie, and great	itly pra-
Etised and expert in histories.	70.
Thatishe Castilians for these three hundred yeeres last p	ast bane done nothing of any worth without the Portugals.	73-
That Portugall is the principall cause of all the warre.
noles which have bin since the yeare 1 580, even till t and will be still if order be not taken to the contrary.
How king Philip doth gourmandise and increch upon Etions of the Popes and Cardenals.	74.
That tyranny is as proper & natural to the Castilian a ter is to a man: and that all which he bath in any pa world, hath bin vsurped, either by his predecessors or selfe. uninstly and by plasme tyranny; and that it is no time since the predesessors of Philip have used to ser
turne by poysoning.	76.
The hatred which the Ecclesiasticall and Regular pe
Portugal baue to Philip king of Castile.	85.
The nature and disposition of the Portugals.	86.
Iohn the second king of Portugal, the scourge and cha	_ '
the Castilians.	87.
That the realmes of Arragon, of Valencia, and the Co
Barceloua, & other Seignsories, do appertaine of righ Duke of Loraine: and how Fernand the great gran of Philip was one of the maisters of Machianell.	88.
The crueltie of Philip: and how he maketh no exception
	.ø91.
That king Philip promised sourcescore thousand Duc	•
baue the king Don Anthonio killed.	95.
The blinduesse and inucia lement of those, who beeing the ers of king Philip, doe excuse and defend him.	97.
Good and wholesome counsell for subjects cowards their gees.	99.
The great rents and renennes which Philip draweth 3
from the Churches of Caffile.	101.
. J C C of Cultines	The :
	9
•

٠.

The offer made by Philip to them of the pretended 1	Reformed religion, to cause them to make warre against the l	late King of Fraunce•	104.
How greatly Philip hath pained himselfe, to trouble	be estate of the French king, by the meanes of some of the chi	efe beads
both of the one religion and of the other.	105.
The reason wherefore king Philip yeelded the citie of e	Arzilto
Muley Hamet.	107.
The great difference & dinersity betweene the manner	s of Philip king of Castile, and Anthonio Ling of Portugall.	107.
The cause why Don Anthonio resused the meanes to his realme of Portugall.	109.
Offers made by king Philip to Don Anthonio.	109.
The explication promised by the Author.	119.
Of the prouerb: If the Cockerell had not come, the Cock	e bad bin taken.	119.
Of Ausla.	121.
Of Simancas.	122.
The indgement given by the Lackeys against the Arch	obishop ef
Toledo.	123.
Of Gelerice.	124.
Of the Castle of Coimbre.	125.
Of the king of Castile.	126.
Of Egbert the first king of England.	132.
Of the Castilians and Castile,	132
The reason why Braga entitleth it selfe Primate of	Spaine.
page.	132.
Toledo, Cordua, and other kingdomes of new Caftile,	set at libertie, and reconcred from the Mores.	132.
Of the Cities of Spaine.	134.
Of the townes of Spaine,	135.
•

. .

٠.

.

THE

· .

THE SPANISH PILGRIME

OR

A ROMISH CATHOLICKES DISCOVERIE,

By way of exhortation.

Wherein is shewed by good and evident reasons, infallible arguments, most true and certain histories and notable examples, the right way and true meanes to resist the violence of the Castilian King, to breake the course of his designes, to abate his pride, and to ruinate his puissance.

Oft excellent Princes, they which doe make profession of wrattling or of fencing, doe principally studie how to discouer the trickes and deuises vsed by their aduersaries in these kindes of exercises; for that having once marked and taken notice of the same, they doe combat with so much the more hardinesse and assurance, as having conseived thereby a full and assured hope to ouer-come their enemies, and by giving them the foyle, to gaine the prize propounded for the victory. In like manner cought we in all affaires diligently to search out the original of every thing, that we may foresee and prevent all the מינים יציים שוניים לי בווים לי

Therefores that mound Philip king of Castile to stir vp warres in France, what opinion he hath of the Esench mation inconneniences which may grow therein, to the intent. they may not endamage vs in the time to come afterwards. Now that which we in this Treatife ought most curiously to put in practife, is to know and discouer the reasons which have moved Philip King of Cafele to make warre in France, with so great expence and charge of his treasure. with so great losse of his people, and with so great decrease and diminution of his dominions, especially in the Low Countries. If the most Christian King Henrie the third were living, he could say as much as a certaine stranger his servant comming from Spaine, in the yeare 1583, in the moneth of May, did give him to vnderstand: and that was. that the sayd King Philip seeing how his most Christian Maichtie had permitted Monsieur de Shoffe, the County du Briffar, and other Lords and Gentlemen, to goe with an army by Sea to give aide and succour to Don Anthony the true & rightfull King of the Realms of Portugall, who had beene elected King according to the custome of the Portugals, by all the ciries and townes of the favd Realme, and by many Provinces and Signories out of Europe, being dependants of the same Realme and Kingdome. The said Philip did deliberate in a solemne set Councell to stirre vp and procure a civill warre in France: laying, the French nacion is at this day of fuch a nature, and likewise the English, that they never thinke vpon the time to come, nor carefor any thing, but for the present, and that which they have in hand, as being more defirous to gaine day by day three or foure Crownes then to keep three or foure thouland already gotten: fo farre are they changed from their old and naturall disposition. For in former times they had a desire to goe abroad out of their owne Country for the firecouring of Kings and Princes afflicted & despoyled of their Realms and Dominions: and to make warre upon the Infidels, and to chastife tyrants, whereas now their thoughts are quite & ce cleane altered, and they doe fer their minds altogether to 44 the getting of money vyon any conditions whatformer, and they

they are now growne to be no leffe in love with the lascini. » ourneffe, and delights of their owne country, then they are in dislike with the sterility and extreame heat of Spaine, & ,, other discommodities of this countrey: and for this cause >> we shall the more easily perswade and induce them to make ... warre within their owne countries, euen against their own .. brethren, coufins, parents, and countrimen, rather then a- .. broade against their enemies. And for this cause I will and ,, ' am resoluted to spend one million of gold the more yearely, ,, to the intent I may keepe and entertaine them alwayes in ... domesticall and civill warres. So that being held occupied, and having their hands full in their owne countrey, they shall not be able to resolue to passe into the Realmes and dominions of any other. And they meanes hereof shall I be able easily to preserve the Realme of Portugall to my selle ,, with all that doth depend vpon it. And what socuer it shall ... cost me the keeping, yet the profit will be greater then the expense, for that each years I doe leavy thereof nears three millions of gold, and continuing in the possession of the fame. It may be that in time I shall be able to gainethe affections and good wils of the Portugals, howbeit that I know they be now at this day very contrary against me. 22. But hereafter, if I get them once to be my friends, and ha. uing with them their frong thips, gallions, and other vef. felsof warre, befides the good counsell and conduct of all ... sheir fage and experienced mariners, I shall make my selfe a fole and absolute Lord of all the Ocean Sea, and I shal cause .. my felfe to be redoul ted and obeyed throughout the whole world and so will retaine & keepe in my hands this realm. which of all the kingdoms of Spain is of most importance, ... to the intent I may leave it fine & peaceable to my fuccesfors. This is the sum of the speech which Philip had, and of the conclusions which he edoke with his counsell in the city of Tisowin November 1582 after the arrival thicker of the Marquefle de Suma Cruce, 'at fuch time as he returned victorious from the Iland of S. a. Michaell. In the fame Соплосії

The league of France made in imitation . of that in the yeare 1462. Stephen Gari. bay lib, 17.

Councell was by him also laid the first and principall stone whereupon the late League of France was tounded. And. there it was first by him ordained, concluded and baptized. in imitation of that which was fo named, and made by the rebels in Castile against King Henrie the fourth, and which afterwards was againe reuined in fauour of Isabell and Fer-Cap. 10, FE 12. dinand his great grand parents. This great designe and refolution of his was faithfully reported vato the faid King (as hath beene said) by this stranger his servant with many particularities: and amongst others, that the Castilian had fent into France nine fundry men, of purpose to corrupt with mony and faire promises, the Princes, Lords and Gentlemen of France, of whom many were particularly named, who from thence forward held the party of Philip. and many which were ready to do the like, as the event did afterwards make manifelt. And the faid Philip to gaine likewise the Captaine Landreau, had once resolved to send into France the Captaine Anthony, a Portugall, who being married at Rochel, was at that time prisoner in the Castle of Lisbone; and for this effect had granted him his life, with offer of his good fauour by the moanes and procurement of Alende is the Aleade Tayade, who did oftentimes repaire to the grand Prouge caftle of purpose to see and visit him, and had conference of the kings with him for a long time together. Notwithstanding Philip fearing least he should discover the practise, caused him afterwards to be hanged, notwithstanding the promise hee had made him. This Captaine Anthony discouered the whole matter vnto a certaine personage in whom he had ... great trust and affiance, and requested him to keepe it very fecret, till such time as he should be gotten into France, to advertise the most Christian king thereof, and the king of Portugalkynto whom the faid Captaine Authory had prain -edulan to communicate it, ashe did. And as touching the Captaine Landreau, he was enforced to take part with the > Castilian, and to accept the mony that was offred him for "the fafetie of his owne life: whereof also he aductifed the > > king

boufe.

king of Portugall, who was then at Beauvais on the Sea: and having given him to vnderstand to what intent he had done it; he prayed him to looke to the safeguard of his person, for that he was in exceeding great danger. The which the said Prince Don Anthonio did within few dayes after proue to be most true, and had beene taken, if he had not saued himselfe with great speed, as there was then taken one. of his fonnes, with many gentlemen Portugals of his traine, by the people of the Duke de Mercaur: who did ranfacke and make spoile of all that did appertaine both to him and his traine, of whom some held themselues happy, that they could get away in safetie. Of these nine men (of whom I' haue spoken) certaine were apprehended, who discouered the whole intention of the enemy. Notwithstanding as little and small reckoning was made thereof at that time, as there is now at this day of any thing, be it held never so necessary and needfull to free vs from vtter ruine and destruction. Moreover, the same stranger (of whom weehaue made mention) did at the same time of his comming, advertise the most Christian king, that it was reported throughout all Spaine, among all persons of any good fort and qualitie, that his Catholike Maiestie had resolued to enter into league, and to confederate himselfe (Sir) with your Maiestie, and to make you great proffers, to your exceeding great benefit and advantage, so that you would make warre upon the fayd lateking your predecetor. Befides, it was reported, that he promised to give voto your Maiestie a pension of two hundreth thousand crownes a yeare. Howbeit, some say, that this was onely to be for an earnest and assurance of his promises: and they doe affirme this for most certaine; that the two hundreth thousand' crownes were all in a readine fle within a caftle named Ox. Philip by vit agan, appertaining to the Lord of Luxes not farre from lawfull trea-Rounceual. And it was further reported at the same time, ties laboreth that the faid Philip, to be the better assured of the amitie against it of your Maichie, did demand to have in mariage the La-Brench which should be borne of this mariage (were they sonnes or daughters) should be inheritors to the realine of Nz. uarre: and that hee would give vnto your Maichie in recompence the Isles of Sardinia & Maiorque and Minorque. and would moreouer bind himselfe to establish your Maie. stie, at his owne proper costs and charges, king of Guyene: and that he did al'o desire to give you in mariage, the Ladie Isabel Clure Eugenia, the infant of Spaine his elden daughter, together with the Duchy of Mylan: promising to that effect, to get a di'pensation from the Pope, and all such declarations as should be needfull thereunto. Your Maie. stie should know these things here alledged better then any other: and whether the report which ian thereof at that time (when he did hold treatie with you) were true or no. Surely this was a great tentation: but the love, which your Maiestie bare to your countrey, and the obligation of loyalty which you ought vnto your king, had more force and interest in you, then all the promises of an ambitious Tyrant. The bruite which ran thereof throughout all France. and also the certaine report of the ill entertainment given by your Maiestie to a gentleman, who had the managing of this businesse, and had made an ouerture thereof vnto you, did gaine you the affections of all good Frenchmen: who did thereupon imprint you in their hearts, and much more, when it was knowne, that your Maiestie had aduertiled the most Christian king of the same in the year 1 582 Insomuch that his Maiesty did permit you the yeare following 1584, to make an affembly of the chiefe Heads and Lords of the religion at Mountaban: where it was well knowne, that your Maiefty did fharply reprotection which had plotted these troublesome practites, and others which were seene afterwards to bee set abroach by thee_ memy, in the yeare 1585. And that your Maiestie did then make an accord reciprocally, neither to enterprise, nor to, deliberate upon any thing, the one against theother.

 C_3

ractife

And it was reported that all the pretended reformed Churches in this affembly, did require your Maiestie for their Chiefe; and secondly, Monsieur the Prince of Conde: and that all this was done by the permission of the said most Christian King; who did greatly repent himselfe, that heehad let passe the oportunitie, to give aid and succours to the late King of Portugall, for the recoverie of his Realme, as himselfe declared to that stranger about mentioned, being at Bloys, in the yeere 1589. At which time he complained of the tyrannie and irreligion of Philip, and sent him into England, there to entreat vpon his affaires with the Queene and the King of Portugall: vnto whom hee promifed, that the first thing which he would doe, after he had recovered Paris, should be, to fend an armie into Portugall, and to make warre upon the enemie within his owne countrey. and to constraine him to demand peace, as the English with the aid of the Portugals had at other times confir ained his predecessors to doe the like. And in case, that the said King of Portugal did and should vndertake the Voyage, as it was given him to vnderstand that he was so resolved; he prayed him, that so soone as he should be arrived thither, he would aduertise him thereof, to the intent, that immediately youn The desire his comming into Portugall, or any other part of Spaine, if that the Fre. he had but two thousand men, yet hee would send them a- third had te way with all speed, because he knew full well, and was most reflore Por assured, that if the enemie were once entangled in Spaine, gall to her li and kept busied at home, hee should soone be rid of him in France, as the euent did make it manifest. For as soone as the newes came, that the King of Portugall was at Lisbon, the most Christian King, for the accomplishing of his promile, commanded the late Monsieur, the Marihall de Biron, that he should put himselfe in a readinesse to passe into Portugall with as great speed and diligence as was possible, for to succour the Portugals, and to give aide to their rightfull King Don Anthonio, to reestablish him in his Kingdome. But God, which with a inft and equall ballance doth weigh and examine all things, did difflay his wondrows workes, where and when st pleased bim.

agall the of the n France.

Hereof then we doe gather two things: the first, That the enemie, to keepe Portugall, hath brought and caused the ciuill Warre in France: the second, That our deliverance and his ruine doe depend vpon this, That there be fent a good army into Spaine, whereof he is exceedingly afraid.

Wherefore, most excellent Princes, to deliuer your estates from the danger that threateneth them, and to fer them in affirance, you ought to undertake, and to enterprise this Voyage, so importune, and so necessarie for all Christendome, without having any regard to the charge thereof, be it neuer so great, considering that in not doing it, and that presently, you shall every day more and more in time to come, bring your felues into hazard and extreame danger. Take example by the times fore-past, and looke vpon the instructions contayned in Histories, written by men no lesse curious then vigilant and well assectioned to the weale publike, and in reading and vinderstanding them, make your owne profit and benefit of them.

Agathocles, after he had beene about seven yeeres King of Sicily, being enuironed both by Land and by Sea, within the Citie of Syracusa, by the Carthaginians: and sinding himselse in great trouble and perplexitie, as being lately : a thing it forfaken of many people of his owne Realme, who had at the first beene partakers with him; and perceiving also that he wanted both victuals, money, and other necessarie munitions for the warre, and that it was not possible for him to escape out of the hands of the Carthaginians, if he did not vse some draught or denice, which had not erst beene put in practife: Hedidat the last leave within the Towne a bro-.

> of, a certaine number of men, whom he knew to be well affected vnto him; and taking with himselfe certaine other. troopes, he embarked them, vnknowne to any whither hee went.

ther of his owne, to whom hee committed the commaund and charge thereof, and left with him for the defence there.

untrey.

went and fetting fayle to Africke, hee there landed: where hee warred to couragiously spon the Carthaginians, as if they had beene but his equals. And having at the first bezinning defeated certaine of their Captaines that came against him, he oner-ran, harried, and wasted all their Countrey, hee burnt and ransacked all their Townes, Villages, and houses of pleasure round about Carthage. After which victorie and good fortune, with a certaine number of fouldiers, Bandoliers, and adventurers, which came and joyned themselves with him (a thing vsuall and ordinarie in such tumultuous and troublesome times) he encamped within a League of Carthage. By this stratageme, his affaires did not onely prosper in Africke, but throughout all Sicily also: for Antander (so was his brother named) being certified of the good succeile of Agathecles, tooke courage vnto him, and fallying out of Syracusa ypon the Carthaginians that befieged him, hee woon their trenches, and hauing flaine a great number of them, hee made fuch hauocke amongst them, that this their ouerthrow, and the victories of Africke, being spread abroad and reported from thenceforth all the strong holds and places of Sicily (that before held with the Carthaginians) did then revolt from them, This was and did altogether abandon them: which was the occasion bout 214. also, that Agathocles returning victorious into Sicily, did before th all the rest of his life time afterwards enjoy it quietly and birth of C peaceably.

After the death of Agarhoeles, and his partizans, the Signiorie of Carthage continued the Warre for the Conquest of Sicilia, in such fort, that in the end they carryed it, and held the whole Island in their possession, which was about 277, yeares before the birth of Christ. Where-upon the Romanes considering of all these their exploits, and percesuing that the puissance of the Carthaginians was very great, and that they held not onely the greatest and test part of Africke, which they had subdued by sorce of Armes, but also many peoples of Spaine.

c'

with fundry Isles in the Sea, round about Sardinia & Italy, they did very wifely imagine, that this neighbourhood of theirs would proue very dangerous & perillous vnto them. if they should finish and goe through with the conquest of all Sicily. For this cause they tooke such good order in prouiding for their affaires, as they brought the Carthaginians to this extremitie, that they had no more in their possession face the Towne of Erix: the which Amilear Barcyn, the father of Hamuball, did defend against them most valiantly for a long time, and did therein maruellous deeds of armes. Notwithstanding the Carthaginians seeing that they could 1840 yeres not withstand nor refist the force and puillance of the Romans, they fent a messenger vnto Amilear, commanding him to render and deliver vp the Towne immediately, and to make peace with them, to the greatest honor, profit, and adnantage that he could possibly, for the state of Carthage.

ere the of Christ

se yeere

ying of car touz Hannind his oonnes.

Amilear (doing as the beigniorie had commanded nim) gave vp the Towne to the Conful Lutt visus, and within few dayes after, following the course of his affaires, returned into Africke, where hee had many victories against certaine feditious persons: and so he settled the estate of Carthage in rest and quietnesse. This done, hee made a voyage into Spaine, taking with him his sonne idannibal, who was not then aboue eight or hine yeeres of age, together with his mother (who was a Spaniard) and three other of his younger sonnes, Asarubal, Mago, and Hanno; of whom, Amilcar their father was wont to say, That hee nourished foure fierce Lyons whelpes, who were resolute to worke the destruction of the estate of Rome. Amilear then being in Spaine, by his prudence and liberalitie did gayne the hearts and good affections of the Spaniards, that he knew well he should be able by their meanes to have about againe with the Romans, to recouer from them both Sicilia and Sardimia (which they had also in their puissance) and that so in the end he might palle from thence into Italy, and there to procu e their vitte ruine and descruction. Eur ber's greuchivd nented by death, he charged his sonne Hamibal (whom hee In the veere had conjured to be, during his life, an veter and vnreconcila- 228. ble enemie to the Romans) to put this his enterprise in execution. Hannibal, after the death of Asarabal his brother in law (who succeeded his father in law Amilear in that In the years gouernment) being then made gouernour of Spaine, tooke 223. the Citie of Saguntum (which is now called Monvedre) after hee had held it besieged the space of eight moneths. In the yeer After the taking whereof, he began to dispose and prepare 217. himselfe to the voyage of Italy: and having with great trauailes and many difficulties passed the Alpes, he obtayned in In the yeer proces of time to many notable victories against the Ro- 216. mans, and did put them in such feare and terror, that they Hannibal p did in a manner hold themselves vtterly vndone & forlorne. seeh into Ita And so had they beene indeed, if they had not beene aduited to fend Scepio into Africke: who made fuch cruell warre fo Scipio goetl forcibly and fo violently vpon the Carthaginians, that hee against Car confirayned them to call home Hannibal out of Italy; who thage. within fhort time after, with the whole estate of Carthage, was ouerthrowne & brought to nought, as is well knowne vnto all men. And so by this meanes were the Romans eased and deliuered, enioying peace and quietnesse, and the Carthaginians vindone, defeated, and subdued: and their estate (which had beene so famous and renowned) was vtterly ruinated and brought under the power and puissance of their enemies.

٠.

Xerxes King of Persia seeing himselfe in a miserable estate, and bethinking how he might deliuer and rayse himselfe up againe, he made choyse of certaine of his servants, fit for the execution of his intended purpole, and them hee fent into Europe with store of money, to corrupt the Orators of the Townes and Commonwealths of Greece: and having corrupted them of Athens and of Thebes, hee made them to rise in armes, and to make warre upon the Spartans. By this meanes Greece being fet in trouble and dif- Physaco Sention, sent for Agofilem (who having at that time subdued ties of S Blest Ism. a great part of the Empire of Persia) and being willed to come home, was enforced to quit and abandon the same, for the religuing of his Countrey from those troubles wherewith it was entangled. And because the Money of Persia had an Archer engrauen on the one side thereof, the same Agessian had a saying, That ten thousand Archers had driven him out of Asia, and had beene the cause to make him loose a most stately and puissant Empire. By this pollicie then did Xerxes rid himselse from the trouble and extremitie wherein he was, driving out his enemie from his Countrey, and recovering his estate, that was neere ruine and consusion.

ius King otland.

By these examples (most excellent Princes) was Achains King of Scotland, the some of Elfins, a singular good Prince, and of excellent vertue, induced in the yeere of Christ 791. to make a perpetual and irreuocable Peace and League of Amitie with Charlemaigne King of France. at such time as he saw himselfe hardly bestead by the Saxons & English, who then possessed the better part of Great Brittaine, which within a few yeeres after was called by one onely name, England. The other Kings, the successors of Charlemaigne, considering that this peace and amitie was more necessarie for them, as being more to their profit and aduantage, then it was to the Scots themselves, who sought it, they have continued the same even till this day, and by meanes thereof haue oftentimes constrayned the Englishmen, when they have beene in warres & enmity with them, to retire and withdraw themselues out of France: and many times also they have kept them so busied in their own countrey, that they have had enough to do to defend themselves. And they have taken from them both the desire & the means to passe into strange & soreine Nations: yea, there have bin some of the French kings, who have given to the Scot, to this end and purpose, more then 50000. Crownes; which was as much in those dayes then (having regard to the change and difference of the times) as two millions are at this day.

giuen Scots French

I will omit many other Histories, which make notably to this our purpose, because I know well that these are sufficient to shew how greatly it concerneth and importeth the Protestant Princes, and most Christian King of France to free your selfe from the encombrance of this burthen now laid vpon you, and to fend a good armie into Spaine: for as much as by fuch a voyage well handled and to good purpose, dependeth both the safety of your selves, and the ruine of your enemy. If you make warre vpon your enemy within Spaine, hee shall be compelled to call home all his forces not onely from France & the Low Countries, but al those which he hath in Lombardy, Naples, Sicily, Sardinia, and other countries: we had good proofe and experience The meanes hereof euen of late: For as soone as the Castilian saw the to ruinare the English possessed of Calice, hee did incontinently send for enemy, all his gallies of Naples, Sicily, and Genes: He fent to intreate the grand master of Maltha to send him the Gallies appertaining to the knights of the Religion. Which had been done if the French Gentlemen, which were of the order, had not opposed themselves against it. He caused in all haste the Forces which hee had in Brittaine to passe into Spaine: and there is no doubt but hee had likewise called. home all those which he had in other countries, if the Eng. lish had remained there any longer time. You see then (most excellent Princes) that by passing into Spaine, you may withdraw from oner your heads the sword of the Castilian and deliner your country from his proud yoke and tyranny. But you will say: the enemy hath great and puissant forces. and a great number of old and expert fouldiers; by whose meanes, albeit they be farre off, yet being called backe into. Spaine, he will greatly endamage and annoy you, and consequently, your voyage may proue unprofitable, and perhaps very dangerous: and so you may be enforced to retire and returne home againe, not onely with shame and confusion, but (which is more) in great trouble and extreame. perill. But vnto this I answer. Fire .

ırd ounfell

First, if you do all things with prudence and good aduise, you reapethereby incredible profit and commoditie, and the danger will be small, or none at all.

Secondly, that in Spaine there are many places upon the Sea coast which you may easily take and command, and whose situation is so strong by nature, that if they be fortified by art and the induttrie of man, you shall defend and keepe them with a very small charge, and much more easily then the enemy doth keepe Blanet in Brittaine: and those will serue you for sure places of retrait.

Thirdly, in Spaine there are many nations which do hate the Castilian extremely: for that they have beene tyrannized, either by himfelfe, or by his predecessors: and these (when they shall see themselves aided and affisted in good earnest, and to purpose) for the great desire which they haue to be at libertie, will soone take armes against the e-nemie.

Fourthly, those Souldiers which are out of Spaine being called backe by their Lord and master, cannot arrive there within foure moneths at the soonest, and within two moneths may you arme and furnish fit and ready for the warres, all those of the countrey which will take your part. For this is most certaine, that the very Climate of the countrey doth helpe and aide to make them able and active. I my felfe, and many others in Portugall have sometimes seene a company of new souldiers at their first entring into garrison, to seem rather a troupe of beggers, and poore rascals, rather then fouldiers, al of them being so poore, naked and milerable, as we had pittie to see them; and yet within foure or five dayes, after that they have been enew apparelled, and well appointed, if you had seene them settled in the garrison, you would have said, that they had beene great Gentlemen, and they did carrie themselves with so good a grace and countenance, as if they had beene brane and old trained fouldiers. I doe affine you, that two moneths will suffice to them of the country to make them southers.

The

The greatest difficultie is to make them abide, and not to feare the fire of the Hargubulh. Moreover, the Provinces of Spaine are rich, as all the world knoweth, and the inhabi- The nature of tants make not any account nor reckoning of their wealth, the naturall when there is any question for the recouering of their li- Spaniard. bertie. For in this case they will not spare to spend it liberally, as was to be seene by the offer which they made to king Philip, after that the Englishmen were retired from Calice: and therefore by fending of money into thele quarters, they will gather together fittie thousand men of warre to pesse into Spaine for their succour, defence, and preseruation, sooner then the enemie shall bee able to cause five thousand to come thither from any forraine partie.

If any man shall say, that seeing two moneths are sufficient to make the naturall Spaniards good fouldiers, thee. nemy may therfore much sooner affemble and arme a great number of men then we shall get for succour. I answer: I would agree thereto, if there were in Spaine armes sufficient wherewith to arme and furnish them: but they are so rare and daintie there to be had, that there bee many great townes notably well peopled, within the which aman cannot finde fiftie Hargubushes. And if there were any flore Armes very of armes to be had, yet the Spaniards in Spaine would take rare in Spaine. armes sooner, and much more cheerefully for their libertie, then for the service of one that tyrannizeth over them. Especially the Princes and great Lords, who doe desire nothing so much as that there were some realine or pronince within Spaine in full and free libertie, and which might be gouerned by it selfe, to the intent it might serue them for a place of refuge and sanctuarie, as they had the like in times past. For Spaine being in manner as an Iland, at this day the Princes, Lords and Gentlemen of marke cannot easily lorge from 1154 withdraw themselves from thence; by meanes whereof they are held in great fluerie and subjection. When there were feuerall kings in Nauarre, A ragona of Pot ugall, if the Castilians were at any difference with your mig, or . nei of an llad.

the Nauarrois, the Arragonois, or Portugals with theirs, they would have retired themselves the one to the other; by whose liberalitie they were ever provided of all things needfull and necessary for the life of man, and sometimes with greater eafe and commodity then in their owne countrey: as it happened in the time of Fernand king of Portugall, and of Henrie the second king of Castile, who slue his owne naturall and lawfull brother; which was the cause that County Don Fernand de Castre, and Don Alvar peres de Castre his brother: Men Suares, Grandmaster of Alcantara: Suer Inan de Parada Gouernour of the Realme of Galatia: Petro Giron, Grandfather of Calatrana, Alonso Giron his Nephew, and many other great Lords and Gentlemen, with a great number of Cities and Townes holding the party of the king deceased, did conney themselnes into Portugall, where they were received by the king Fernand. . and had most honourable entertainment, with most notable fauours, rich presents, and incredible gifts, which hee gaue vnto them most bountifully. In so much that from theneeforth the Castres did continue still and inhabit in Portigall, from whom are descended those which are there of that name now at this day. The like happened to Diego Lopez Pachecoa Portugall (albeit not for so sust and honeurable a cause) who going from Portugall into Castile for being charged with the death of the Queene Dame Iues de Caftro, in the time of the king Don Peter of Portugall, hee was then created Lord of Beiar, and his children also made Lords of other peoples, of whom the Marquesse of Villana, the Dukes of Escalon, and many other great Lords have their descent and originall. In like manner, in the time of king Tuan of Portugall of happy memory, the Acugnas and Pimentels went into Castile: and of them. are descended directly in the line masculine, the Dukes of Offuna and Counties of Benauent, and in a manner all the Princes and Lords of Castilo, and Dame Iulian de Lanca, Are Duchesse of Auero in Portugall. Now at this day the Mo-

Hieroin Gu. iel.cap. 23. fol.81 pag. 2.

Alias Ioba,

Nobilitie of Spaine doth greatly want such places of re- The Nobiliti fuge and fanctuarie, and now, the least Prouost or Marshall of Spain war is sufficient to arrest the greatest Lord of the countrey, yea places of rethough it were the brother of the King himselfe : in so tuge and range this much that the Princes and Lords of Spaine doe as heartily day. desire to see some Realme or Province set at libertie, as they doe their owne safetie. None can tell how great an afflicti. The sorrow on and notable a misery famine is, but hee that wanteth griefe of the bread to eat: and the Nobilitie of Spaine doth at this day Princes and With great griefe finde that to be true, which they most of Spaine to fee all feared in the time of Charles the fifth, whose greatnesse the invasion they had even then suspected: and for this cante they did & vsurpation shew themselves mightily aggricued at such time as King of Portugal, the desire the Philip did enterprise the vsurpation of Portugall. Coneffagio a Genouois in the booke which he hath writ- at libertie. ten in fauour of the fayd Philip, and which is intituled, The vnion of the Realme of Portugall with the Crowne of Castile, doth tell vs both the one and the other of these matters. And although in that worke of his there be many true reports, yet we doe know him for a great and notable Lyer: and even the very first word of that booke is an vntruth; in that he hath entituled it. The vnion of Portugall with the Crowne of Castile: for king Philip in the affembly The oth of 1 of estate which he held at Tomar in the yeare 1581. where Philip. the Portugals against their wills, and by force did receive him for their king, promised and sware with a solemne eath, neuer to intermingle the matter and affaires of Portugall with those of Castile, but to keepe for ever the Mo- The Explicit narchy of Portugall entire in the same estate, and in the won of the same manner, as the kings his precessors had alwayes pre- Genealogy serued and maintained it: paying all the pensions, sees and the French wages to all the officers of the kings house, both Spirituall The author and Temporall, in like fort as they were payd in the times whereof was of the true and good kings forepassed. Somewhat of this Frier loseph matter a man may fee in the end of the booke of Explication Texeseof the Cenealogie of his most Christian Maiestie, where it is spoken of the first king of Castile.

haue to fee it

Moreouer, the said Conestagio, as a man of a maligne and peruerse spirit, is a most vngratefull enemy of that nation, which hath both advanced and honoured him. For wee knew him at Lisbon when he served Anthonio Caulo, and afterwards with Stephen Lercare, a Marchant of Genoa. He hath in his booke these words:

fol.62.

In Castile this succession gave great matter Whereof both to muse and to talke, both in private and in publike: for that the king saused the Estate of Portugall to be united to his other Realmes, and Dominions, not caring bow, nor in what sassion it were done, so it were effected. The which the Nobilitie tooks very ill: in so much as it seemeth that all the great men of Spaine, since the time of Charles the sist to this day, could not away nor like of the greatnesse of the king: because thereof it hat proceeded; that hee maketh lesse reckoning of them then did the ancient kings of Castile, and hee constraineth them to be equall to their inferiours, as well in instice as otherwise.

If Don Antonio king of Portugall were living, hee could witnesse, how after that the enemie was entred into Portugall with a huge armie, and had taken Lubon, hee being then in the towne of Badaios, many Lords of Castile did offer him to have entrance into the sayd towne, and did promise him all their best aide and assistance to seize vpon the enemie himselse. The which the said Prince could not essent nor put in execution; for that within sew dayes after he was dispossessed all the realme in the citie of Puerto of Portugall. He could also certifievs, how that seeing in these parts many great Lords of Castile did send vnto him, offring him their service and assistance, in case that he would set foot in Portugall: the which matter he communicated (if I bee not deceived) to the king and principall Lords of France, and principally to the estate and Coun-

cell

of, he did thus reply vnto me: Albeit I doe beleeue some part of this you fay, yet there resteth one thing, which is as a scruple in my mind; and that is, in that (as I have read) the Portugals and the Castilians are both of one and the same Province, and are borne in a manner of one Stock, and issued of one Root, and doe speake one and the selfe-same Language: that is the opinion of Conestagio, of whom we Conestag, haue before spoken. But he sayth he knoweth not what; lib. 1. fol. 4. for the Portugals are descended of the Gaules, the Celtes, Pa.2. and the Braccates, and their Language is almost the same with the Latine Tongue. But as touching the Castillians. we cannot certainely fay, from whence they are descended: Neuerthelesse, the best judgement and conjecture thereof. that can be made by circumstances and euident proofes, is, that they are descended of the Vandals, of the Iewes, and of the Moores; and their Language is in a manner all one with that of the Moores, and their pronunciation is all one, or much alike. Thereof it commeth, that the Castillians being in the countrey of the Saracens, or of the Turkes. they doe soone and very easily denie the Christian Faith, and doe turne altogether Turke and Infidell. True it is, that the Princes, great Lords, and Hyos de Algo. are extracted eyther from the Gothes, or from the ancient Spa-. niards, which inhabited the mountaines and the countries of Leon, and of Oujedo, and the Prouince of Galitia, within which is enclosed the ancient Portugall. Conestagio in the same place last before recited; sayth, that these two Nations doe hate each other most extreamely; and hee fetteth downe one notable vntruth, to wit, That the hatred The vntruth of the Portugall doth farre exceed that of the Castillians; of Conestagio which is altogether false, and vntrue. The Portugals doe not have the Castillians, but they abhorre their actions, as most wicked and full of crueltie and tyrannie: The Castil. lians on the contrarie because they cannon with any reason: hate the actions of the Pormeals, for that they are good and infly they doe therefore have their perform, who have fo often often ouercome, vanquished, and ill handled them; and so much the more, for that their numbers were alwayes (asa man may fay) infinite, and the Portugals were very few, and in comparison of them, as nothing. The hatred of the Castillians is so certaine against the Portugals, that it is viually spoken in manner of a prouerbe, That since the battaile of Alybarto, the Castillians would never suffer any to preach vpon the Fryday, in the first weeke of Lent; on which day the Church vieth to fing that part of the Golpell, where it is faid, Lone your enemies: and therefore they judge the Portugals to be like themselves, and they esteeme them to be of the same nature and disposition as they are. Both the one and the others hatred may well be seene by that which Charles the fift said one day to the Colonell Ferral, a Portugall, who in the warres betweene the fayd Emperour and Francis the first, King of France, did serue on the French partie against the Imperialists. The warres being ended, and peace concluded betweene those two Princes, the Portugall retyring himselfe into his countrey, did patte by the way of Castile, where he went to visit the said Charles the fift, who knew him very well, and did love him for his valour; and doing him great honour in his Court, he stayed him there for certaine dayes with him: during which time, as hee was one day denising with him very familiarly, hee vsed this speech vnto him: Captaine Charles the 5. Ferras . I would gladly know, what should be the cause Ferras, a Por- that made you to follow the partie of the French against me, seeing wee are of one and the same Nation? for al-" beit you be a Portugall, and I a Castillian, yet are we both "Spaniards. The Colonell made him this answere: Sir. "when the Portugals doe trauaile abroad out of their owne "countrey, whether they be rich or poore, their onely end

ubat

> "and scope is, to get them honour and reputation. For " mine owne part. I had the meanes to line honeftly in my

A speech of to Captaine rugall.

Ageth, 50

" countrey, like a Gentleman: neuertheleffe, being resolved " to see the world. I began to cast my account with my selfe, what what course I were best to take. Having made my recko- » ning, I conceived with my felfe, that I should purchase me, more honour, by bearing Armes against the greatest Captaine of the World, then in taking of his part to serue 2-11. gainst any other: and for this cause I tooke Armes against ... your Maiestie. The Emperour smyling, sayd: I beleeue » that this is not the cause, but rather the old rancour and » hacred which the Portugals beare to the Castillians. The » Portugall answered him againe in great choller: Sir, I An excellent fweare vnto your Maiestie, That neyther for good, nor for answere of a bad, I trouble not my minde with the Castillians, not so Portugall to much as to thinke of them. The Emperour making fem- Charles the 5. blance as though this answere did content him, did embrace him many times and often: but hee judged of the Portugall as his affection led him, for hee had enough of the bloud of a Castillian by his mothers side, to make him to hate him: A little Leanen, &c. And thus may you see the vntruth of Coneffagio: His Historie is well written, .. and in a good style, but most false, and full of passion, for hee both reprehendeth and injurieth all those of whom hee speaketh; yea, euen King Philip himselfe, in whose fauour hee wrote it: and for this cause principally it was forbidden in Portugall. But leaving Conestagio, now that we have shewed how the Castillian Nation is much more maligne and peruerse then all the other people of Spaine, I will tell you one thing worthy to be noted ere wee proceed, which doth more neerely touch the Portugall Nation than any of the rest; that is, That all those Nations generally are so desirous of libertie, that they doe seeke by all meanes posfible to obtayne it, being readie to receive even the Deuils themselves, if they would be readie to further and fanour them in the same. And yet, if any strange Nation should passe into Spaine to any other end, they would vse the vttermost of their endeuours to stop their passage, and to hinder their entrance, making little or no reckoning of their lives, and much leffe of their goods and Substance. N. VED

When I doe speake of causing frange Nations to passe into Spaine, I must tell you times much, That they shall be much more welcome, and finde better entertainment of the people of the Countrey, when they shall be mingled many and divers Nation's together, then if one should goe thither alone: for that this divertitie will take from them all concert and suspition which they might otherwise have, that their comming were to make a conquest of their countrey, and not to procule their libertic and freedome; and to they would vindoubtedly receive them loyfully, and with all acfurance. In like manner, if the Tyrant should commaund them to goe to the warres out of their owne countrey effecially it it were for their Religion, they would ferue him more faithfully then did Ausla and Simancas in Castile, or Celorico & the Castle of Coimbre in Portugall. For proofe The meaning hereof, you may remember, how in the yeere 1588, the King of Castile in his Fleet and Armie by Sca, that came vpon the Coast of France, sent two Regiments of Portugals, each of them confifting of eight hundred men, or thereabouts. These forces (notwithstanding, that in regard of his viu: pation of the countrey, they were enemies to him) yet having promised to scrue him faithfully in this voyage, in the fight which they had against the Englishmen and Flemings, they did make fuch proofe of their valour. that they did farre excell all the rest of the Army in prowelle and deedes of Armes; and they alone did more for the feruice of the King of Caltile, then all the refidue of his Allyes: infomuch, that there was none of them (who had command and government in the Army) that were receiucd with honour by the King Catholike, saue only the Portugall Colonels; namely, Gasper de Sousa, and Antonie Perera: The which Perera before that time had ferued and fought most valiantly for the defence of the libertie of his Countrey, and for the service of his true and naturall King. against the said King of Castile, at such time as hee entred into Portugall with a mightie Army to inuade it.

hereof is ex. pounded in thornd of this Treausc.

-4

The loyalite of the l'ortugals.

Portugali Colourly in the Armic of the ycere 1588.

In the yeere 1 582. when Don Aluar de Bassana, Marquelle de Santa Cruse, did encounter vpon the Sea with the .. Lord de Strece, those which fought best, and shewed themselves most valiant, was the Marquesse de Fanare, a Portu- Marquesse of gall, most true and faithfull to his Countrey, and to his Fauare-King; and by whose counsaile and aduertisements, a certaine great and excellent feruitor of the estate, and of the King Don Antonio, had his life preserved, besides certaine other Gentlemen, his countreymen.

Who tooke the Ship called the Reuenge, belonging to The taking o the Queene of England? euen Don Lewes Contigno, 2 Lord the Reuenge of Portugall, who before time had beene most true and of England. faithfull to his Countrey; and for the defence of his King, fighting against the Duke de Alua, had received many mortall wounds in the battaile of Alcantara, the same day that Lisbon, was loft, which was in the yeere 1 580. and the 26. of Angust.

And for the more distinct and cleare demonstration of the truth of this matter, I will recite vnto you a most true Historie.

In the yeere 1589. Don Anthonie, King of Portugall, accompanied with the Englishmen and Hollanders, made a Voyage into Portugall, and casting anchor in the Hauen of Penicha, they of the Castle began to play with their Ordinance vpon the armie: but the Captaine of the Castle, Anthonio de Aranio, a Portugall, being ascertained that the king Don Anthonio was in that armie, he forbad the Cannoniers to shoot any more, and caused a white Ensigne to be put forth; vpon light whereof, Don Anthonio commanded that euery man should goe on shore, and take their way towards the Towne: the which they did, not without some resistance made by certaine companies of Cassillians, who in the end were forced to retyre, with the losse of some of their people. The first that arrived to the Towne, was the County of Effex, a Prince of the bloud Royall of England, and one that was adorned with many morall vertues. This Lord comming to speake with the Captaine of the Castle. which was voon the Wall, one of his companie sayd: My Lord, the Earle of Essex is come hither by the commandement of the Queene of England, in whose name hee commandeth to have the Castle rendred vnto him. The Captaine answered him; Philip King of Castile hath committed the keeping of this Callle vnto me, and for the same I have done him homage: in regard whereof, I will defend it against all those that shall seeke to dispossesse me of it; and I will not yeeld it up to any person, sauc to the King Don Anthonio, because his it is, and I acknowledge him onely for my King and Lord: and if he be not in this armie, as hath been told me that he is, I would aduise that every man doe retyre himselfe, otherwise I shall cause you all to loose your lines. Vpon this word, the Countie of Effex retyred himselfe to the Sea side, and there went to meete him, the Lords Scipio de Figuegredo Vasconcelles, late Gouernour of the Terceras, and Anthony de Brito Pimentell, and other Gentlemen Portugals of the Kings trayne; who vnderstanding by the Count the speech of the Captaine, went on directly to the Castle, and allured the Captaine, that the King Don Ambonio, their Lord, was come thither. Within a while after the King arriving there, and calling the Captaine, who knew him by his speech, hee made him this answere: Sir, I come to open the gates vnto your Maiestie, The port being opened he kneeled downe before the King, and killing his hands, deliuered him the Keyes of the Castle. This is most true, that if he would have held good, the English armie had not bin able to haue taken that Castle, it was so well furnished and provided of artillerie, and all things necessarie: for besides great store of Iron peeces, there were 85. of Brasse.

The yeelding of the Castle or Penicha.

All these examples doe shew euidently, how faithfull the Portugals are to them, to whom they have once promised and plighted their faith and sidelitie. And for as much as I know that your Maiesties have conceived an opinion of me as of a person given to be somewhat curious, and who is acquainted with the accidents which passed in this Voyage and that your Maiesties have a desire to understand what was the cause why Don Anthonso did not continue in Portugall, and what made him to render up this Castle, and on ther places which were impregnable, and to returne into England with his armie, without doing any other act of any worth, and with the losse of the greatest part of his companie, with which he was embarked; I will briefely recount the fuccesse of this Iourney, craving many particularities. because to count them all, it would require much more time then is requisite for the finishing of this Treatise. I say then, that as God, when he chasteneth & humbleth great Estates and Monarchies, doth suffer and permit, for the sinnes of the people, such as are like Tharao's, Nabachodonozors, Califula's, Nero's, and Dioclesians, vsing them as his executioners and hangmen (as Attila called himselfe the Scourge of God. and Tamerlan the Wrath of God:) to it seemeth he hath permitted that K. Phelip should be his minister & the executioner of his wrath & anger; and that in his secret judgement. beyond all apparance of humane reason, his will is not yet that Portugall should be deliuered and fet at libertie: for it is not possible, that men should be so blinded, to their owne loffe and destruction, as they were in this Voyage, if the Divine puissance had not blinded them, by taking away the vse of their sence and vnderstanding.

The greatest part of the Armie was embarked at Douer. The declara the 24. of March, and from thence went to Plimmouth: on of the Po From thence they departed all together the 29. of Aprill; in the year at which time perceiuing their numbers to be greatly di- 1189. minished, by the contagion that was amongst them; in stead of taking the direct way to Portugall, they fer their course for the Groine, where the most part of the souldiers died, and all the best Canoniers: insomuch, that their forces were much abated, and they gave thereby good leyfure vnto the enemie, both to fend fresh men into Lisbon, and to draw out of Portugal those who were any way suspected:

ble men

Lords and Gentlemen of marke, who were all of them very contrarie to him, and by their absence were greatly missed hillian. Both of their King and countrey. They came to the Groine the fixt of May, where they were till the twentieth, on which day they did againe take shipping, and set sayle towards Portugall, where they tooke land at Penicha the fixe and twentieth. From thence (hauing left in the Castle certaine fouldiers with Anthonie de Brito Pimentell, aboue named, who is the chiefe of the House of the Pimentels of Spaine, and about 800, fick men) they tooke their way (the Generall Drake by Sea, and the Lord Generall Norru by Land) with 35. or 40. horse, and some 6000, foot, so ill armed, that a good part of them wanted their Swords, and there was not of them aboue 50. Corslets: the cause whereof, was want of Waggons and Carriages, for to carry them ouer the land, and the fouldiers themselves were constrained to carry their powder on their shoulders. Besides, many of them at their departure out of their lodgings, had left their Pikes, and some their Harquebuses, loading themselves with pots & bottels of Wine, which they found there in great ane marreth bundance, the which in very truth did the more hinder and endomage them: for by meanes hereof they fell into diverse diseases, and died in great numbers; the English Nation not being accustomed to drinke Wine alwayes, & their Beere is not to strong a kind of drinke. The day following, 3 leagues before their arrivall to a Towne called Loires Vedras, the keyes of the Castle were brought to the king Don Anthonio, which Castle is so strong, that 20. men with necessarie munitions may keepe & defend it against 1 00000. All the way along to Lisbon (which is 60, good miles) there was not one Castillian that durst appeare; and 7 horsemen English did put to flight 60. Castillians. From thenceforth many Portugals came to kille the hands of their King, in great a. bundance: notwithstanding, for that they came without armes, having beene before difarmed, and for that there was no body of whom they might get or have any neither for love nor money (howbeit that they brought with them. good store of siluer purposely to that effect) they did the most part of them returne agains to their owne houses: and there could not be armed of them aboue one thousand foor. and 120, horse with Lances and targets: notwithstanding that the number of them which came was in a manner infinite. Amongst whom there were many Gentlemen of good reckoning, who (because they were not clothed in Veluet and Satin, but plainly after the fashion of the countrey)were not knowne nor acknowledged by the frangers to be of that qualitie. On the Friday the second of lune, The armie are they came in the night time to Lisbon, and were lodged in river at Life the suburbs of Saint Katherine, which are so great, that bon. there were aboue 12000, persons of the Armie lodged there all at large, and yet they held not the third part thereof. The officers of the king Don Anthonio found, that the A great sub Marchandize in this suburbs was worth more then foure urbs. millions, to wit, spices, drugs, sugers, wines, flesh, corne, Biskets, and other prouisions: as Sir Roger Williams an 4 Millions of English Colonell (who was in this armie) did witnesse af- of the suburbe terwards in the towne of Manthu, in the presence of many of Lisbon. persons of good quality: affirming that he had entred into most of the houses of the sayd suburbs, with an English Marchant which is come forth of the citty, and that the Marchandizes which he saw there, were worth aboue sixe millions. This suburbe is toward the West Lisbon; in the 6. Millions. which they were lodged contrary to the resolution which they had before set downe in a Councell held the day before, about two leagues from the citie; which resolution was, that they should have encamped on the East side of the citie for two reasons: one was, to hinder the enemy, that they should not have any succours by land: for that the armie by sea being on the West side, and the sea vpon the South side, and the mountaines of Sintre on the North fide, they could not possibly have any intelligence from flight of the "Castilians.

, A fally of the Caftilians.

The greatneyligence of the armie.

any part. The other reason was, for that being in that quarter, on the East side, they should cleare and free the way for the good people of Portugall to come and to have recourse vnto their king. 'Now in that they tooke vp their lodging on the West part, was an occasion that the enemy might safely and at pleasure sally out of the towne with two hundred horse, who slew and tooke prisoners many Portugals, and a great quantity of victuals which were fent by the townes that tooke part with the king: and they were an hindrance also to many others that they could not come to ioyne with him. The Saterday following, the third of Iune, about two or three houres after midday, there issued out of the citie about two hundred horse and eight hundred foot; some of the which entring within the Areets of the suburbs, and crying aloud, God saue the king Don Anthonie, they came even vnto one of the courts of Guard, and there flue to the number of thirteene or foureteene, for officers of the that they were lodged in the street without any Baricados made for the fortifying of their lodgings. Notwithstanding the Portugals which followed the king, having difcouered them to be Castilians and not Portugals, did give the Alarme so hotly, that a regiment of Englishmen with certaine Portugals making out towards the enemy, did . charge him with that fury, that they made them betake Therepulse & themselues to plaine flight, and slue of them vponthe place fixescore: besides that they tooke fortie or fiftie of their horses; and the flight of the Castilians was so hastie and headlong, that in their entry into the Citie, they left the gate of Saint Antan wide open. In this encounter died an English Cauallier, Colonel of a regiment named Bree, a braue man, and had great experience in the art Militarie. Now for that the Generall Drake did not enter within the port or hauen of the citie untill the Sunday following (as was before refolued hee should have done;) and for that also the most part of the souldiers had neither match nor powder left, sauc onely for the discharge of some two or .three three volley of shot, the Lord Generall Worris was con- The siege rais strained to raile the siege, and to retire his forces the Mon-sed from beday morning, without any other thing attempted against fore Lisben: the city: within the which the Portugals did expect to have The hope of seene the ladders raised up against the walls, for to have the Portugals. made an affault voon the Castilians. And for this very cause Don Rodrigo the same day that the campe did rise, Don Rodrigo Lobo, a de Lobo exe-Gentleman issued of an honourable house, and brother to suited by the the Baron de Aluito (which is the onely Baron in Portu-Lisbon. gal, & a great Lord) was made prisoner and lost his head. The same monday being the fifth of June, the army came to Cascais, from whence they of the army made certaine sallies against the enemy, who were so terrified, that 50 Musquetiers English, and 7 horsemen Portugals made 200. horse Castilians to dislodge from a village within a league and a halfe of Cascais, and to flie to Lisbon in such post hast that they left behind them part of their Arms and baggage The Castle of and their dinner ready dressed. After that (the Castle Case Cascais rencais being rendred) the King and the Generals in a coun-dred to the K. cell held the twelfth of that moneth about noone (whereat were present the Count de Essex with many other Lords& all the chiefe Commanders of the Armie) they refolved to returne against to the Citie of Lisbon the day following, which was the day of S. Anthonie, a Portugall by birth A Councell furnamed Saint Anthonie of Padoa: & their resolution was held to returne thus set downe: That the Lord Generall Norris with all fuch fouldiers as are found and lustic should march by land. and in his company should bee the king: and that the Generall Drake with the Mariners, and all the hurt and ficke fouldiers, and fuch Gentlemen as were not able to march by land, should goe by fea: And to put the enemy in the greater disorder and confusion, they should cause to passe on the other side of the Sea 300. Portugals and 800. English. Which if they had put in execution, without all doubt they had gained the Cittie, notwithstanding that there were within it more then foure thou-

the Groine.

fand Castilians: who had conceived a notable seare of the English and Portugals which were with the king, and they of the cities likewise, as knowing well that at the Groigne 800. English, with 200. Hollanders, and iew Portugals, had defeated 10000. of their people, amongst whom there were some thousand old souldiers which lay there, and were the remainder of the Armie by sea, set forth the yeere before: besides the Countie de Andrada, the Countie de Altimira, and the Leane of S. Iames de Compostella, and many other Gentlemen:insomuch that they of the citie had resolued, that as soone as they should see the Fleet and sea forces of the English to passe the Tower of Bethleem, or the Armie by land to give an affault vnto the citie, the Cardinall of Austria would have embarked himselfe with all his people to passe on the other side of the sea: and for this purpose they held all the Gallies, and many barkes in a readinesse to fet faile. Amongst which there were many hired for 200 aduckats for the passage of three leagues onely. This coun-Iell being ended, and Drake himselfe being a boord the ship called the Revenge, did fet faile about three houres, after. noone, and tooke his course towards Lisbon. Some thought he went to see the channell of Alcacena, which is an entry into the Hauen, by which men do commonly passe, which would anoyd the danger of the Tower of S. Iulian, because in this councell (where had been e called many old Pylots Portugals, who were very expert and well acquainted in that sea) it was resolved, that the Fleet and sea forces should enter that way for their more surety: besides that at that time there was water enough for them, by reason of the conjunction of the Moone: and the windealfo was very fauourable vnto them. Notwithstanding Drake, when it grew towards evening, turned the head of his ship to the Westward, by reason he was advertised, that there passed by a Fleet of thirty faile of Esterlings: of the which hee tooke 25. or 26. But this hindered the resolution former-Ly taken; to as it forted not to that effect which was purpo-wer of S.

ake takerh : Sea, conry to the plution tatin counfel

sed. And it constrained the Lord Generall Norris, the The embar-King, and the Earle of Effex, to embarke themselves the king of the a day following, and to take the Sea, where they met with land.

Drake the Friday following.

I suppose that this short Discourse (which I have here fet downe, without specifying of any other the particularities of this expedition) will fuffice to satisfie the desire of your Maiesties, and to shew the cause, why there was nothing done in Portugall, and that Gods will was not as yet to reestablish her by the meanes of this voyage. And I say moreouer, that the principall cause, why so many faults and ouer- The reason fights were committed, and that nothing was performed why so many or put in execution (according as had been resolved in coun- saules were cell, was, because this armie was leuied by Merchants, committed whereas in matters of this kinde, Princes onely ought to Armielor employ themselues, and that with a setled and aduised deli- Portugall. beration: in such fort, that there ought not any name of an army to be vsed, but by and from them onely: and they ought to have more interest therein then any other, and ought to be at the whole and onely costs and charges both of leaving and maintaining of all armed forces. And last of all, to them alone doth belong the choyse and election both of the Heads and Leaders, and of one Generall and chiefe Commander: vnto whom, as to the Soneraigne, all the others should be subject and obedient. See then the reason why the Lord Generall Drake (being named and sent by Merchants who were most ingaged in this voyage') did frame himself to do that which they would, and what came into his owne braine and fancy, rather then that which the other Lord Generall Norris did well and wisely aduise and counfell him, who was a man of fingular experience, wifdomeand vinderstanding, as well in politike government, as in deeds of Armes, and all matters of warfare. For this worthy Lord did striue and labor by all meanes convenient to have made a longer abode in Portugall, both in the quarters of Lisbon and elsewhere: but after that the army had once set sayle the said Lord General Norra could not from thence forward, by any entreaties, perswade Drake to set foot on land againe in Portugall, and not so much as to take one Citie, where it was wel knowne that there was not any forces, nor any resistance made: neyther was there any meane for the enemie eyther to have succoured it, or after the taking thereof, to beliege it for one yeere at the least. Besides that, with the same it is most certaine, that they might have found in Gold, Silver, Silkes, and Clothes, more then a million of Duckats. Moreouer, the said place might eafily have beene fortified, and by that meanes might have commanded many other places: and afterwards, money being fent into France, England, Holland, and other parts, they might have levied and led thither above fiftie thousand souldiers fooner, then the enemie could have gotten together fine thousand. And this I thinke will suffice for your Maie. flies to understand that which you defire in this behalfe.

But now let vs returne to the purpose which wee had in hand. We have faid, that by this one example it may eafily. be perceived, how faithfull and loyall the Portugall Nation. is to them, vnto whom they do once promise faith and loy. altie; and therefore God graunt, that they doe not accord nor vaite themselves to the Castilian, and that neyther your Maiesties, nor the other Princes and Potentates of Europe doe not confent nor permit them to doe it, nor doe give them occasion to lose the hopes which they yet have of their. libertie. And you ought not to attend or flay vpon the death of Philip: for it may be that the Portugall will more easily accord with the sonne then with the father. And further, as the Monarchie of the Castillian is neyther governed nor conferred with the fword, but by good and fage counfaile; so albeit he should die, yet the same counfaile continueth and remaineth still. Besides, for these many yeeres of late, it hath beene governed without his prefence: and therefore there is little or no hope for any great change or alteration by his death. Now

Now of what great weight and importance this matter will be. Don Francisto de Ivara (the father of Don Diego de I vurin; lately Embassadour at Paris during the League did confesse and make knowne vnto a French Gentleman at Madril, in the yeere 1579. The Gentleman is yet living. and can testifie the truth of that which I will now tell you. The said Francis demanding of that Gentleman (who was then newly come from Barbarie, where the late King had sent him, for certaine of his affaires) what newes hee brought out of that Countrey? his answere was. That the Moores were in a notable feare, by reason theyhad intelligence, that the King Catholike did leuie a great Armie to passe into Barbarie, to revenge the death! of his Nephew, the King Don Sebastian. Whereunto the The speech o fayd Francis replyed, It is not amisse that the Moores a Spanish noshould be in feare: but it were more meer, that the King bleman to a your Maister did understand to what end this Armie is rieman, lenyed; for in very deede, it is for Portugall. And if The most the King Catholike, my Lord, doe make himselfe Mai-Christian king fter of that Realmo, as hee verily hopeth (for hee hol- and all the deth it in a manner as alreadie wrought and practifed) Princes and hee will bring to passe, that not onely the most Christi-Potentates of an King shall be inferior and tributarie vnto him, but of the present to often the organization to also all the other Princes of Europe shall bee subject vn- hinder that the to him, especially the seuen vnited Protinces of the Portugals doe Low Countreyes: and the Pope, with all the Court of not accord Rome, shall doe nothing but what seemeth good vn- stillians, and to him; because, having added vnto his Empire the that they give Monarchie of Portugall, who can be able to refift him? them boocca-For this reason it will concerne the most Christian King, sion to lose the and all other Christian Princes, to ioyne themselues to-liberie. gether, as in a common caule, for that otherwise the King my Maister will make himselfe Lord, and the voluerfall Monarch of all the World, whereby they shall be his subiects, and wee shall be his slaves and vasfalls perpetually.

G 2

hope of their

This that wee have here left recited, doth prooue that which was before spoken: and therefore to returne to the. matter in hand: I say in the fifth and last place, that whensoeuer a great and puilsant army shall be raised to passe into Spaine, be the charge neuer fo great, if it do nothing elfe then wast and spoile the countrey, and take some few cities and townes, and if in regard thereof the Castilian be enforeed to call home his forces (which he holdeth in these parte of Europe for his owne defence, though the comming of those his forces should cause our army to retire, yet I should bold this for a very great benefit; because that which cannot now be done with an hundred, will then be done with ten men, and the charge and expences will bee still lesse and lesse. But it may be, that some of your Maiesties subjects will say vnto me, that this is a matter of great difficultie, and at this time especially very hard to be done: for that having the enemy here at hand, even at our backes, there were small reason for vs to transport our forces into foraine parts. This a good doubt, and may be some trouble to men of a shallow and small understanding, and such as have little indgement to discourse vpon the state of matters: but to them which know the depth and ground of things, it will carry no apparance of danger. But to the intent the trueth may the better appeare, let vs reason together each with other by way of demanding and answering, as is vsed in the Schooles.

Course or ae the or'and a ehman ning the ng of an ie into IC.

The Subject. Be it to if you please, for I will heare you ming be- with a right good will. The Pilgrim. Say then, what is it that you thinke will endamage you? Subjett. The enemy with his forces and with his intelligences. Pilgrim. But if you finde a meane to disness him from hence, who then can hurt you afterwards? Subject. No body. Pelgrim. Doe then as I have told you and without doubt the enemy will be gone from you. Subject. That cannot bee. Pilgrim. Wherefore? Subject. Wherefore, say you? How would you, that we should goe into a strange and for aine country country to Warre upon others, and leave our owne country in the power and puillance of our enemies? If we fend our forces into Spaine (as you would perswade vs) we should be veterly vadenc, as I have given you to vaderstand, Pil. Good God, how are you without judgement and vnderstanding? Take that which I tell you, as I speake it, and not as you conceine it, and answer me to one question categorically. If there were now an armic raised to goe into Spaine to the making whereof, let France spare some source or five thousand men: England three or foure thousand: the Estates of Holland, Zeland, Freezland, and all the rest of their Allies, two or three thousand, besides ships, of which they have great flore; and let some other Princes, Poten. tates, and Common-weales, disburse some proportion of money, for the aiding and furthering of this enterprise : & to these addethree or foure thousand Zwitzers or Lance knights: and then tell me shall France bee vnprouided? or shall England be dispeopled? or shall the Estates be unfurnished of men and shipping, and without meanes to keepe the Seas? or shall the other Princes and common-weales be reduced to such misery, that they shall be vnable to hold their ordinary course in their affaires and proceedings: but rather as they may well spare twice so many men to furnish them to passe into Spaine out of the severall Kingdomes, and yet they are sufficient to imploy greater forces into other his dominions in the West, and neverthelesse powerfully maintaine their owne. Sub. No: I think not fo. Tile. Why then doe you not that which concerneth you so neere, and whereof dependeth the whole and onely remedy of your mischiefe and misery, and wherein you for your part, have a greater interest then any of the rest. Sub. Marry fir: to make up these thousands of men which you speak of; there must be had great store of mony which will as hardly be had, as they that have it, will be loth to depart with it. Pilg. Ohow blind is this people! and how depoyd of counsell and prudence is this nation. O that they would be wife, and that they would understand, and provide for things to come. Our towns, which the enemy may take to morrow next, doth it not import vs. more then 300000 crownes, which is the most that wee shall neede for the furnishing of 4. or 5. thousand mentlf after the taking of Laon, and the reducing of so many good townes, there had been imployed 2 00000 crowns, which are demanded for this enterprise, it may bee; you should have had by this time more then three millions in your purse, and you should not have lost al these towns in France of so great import; Cambray, Dourlan, Calice, Ardes, Amiens, and many other places, with your great Admirall: and so many brave gentlemen and Captaines which are now dead, would ftil have lived to fpeake in French. Moreouer, doe not excuse your selfe and say for your discharge, that a man cannot divine what will follow: for you have beene too too much forewarned of matters as they have fallen out, and there is yet living a Lord, one of the Coun. cell, who at Fountaine Bellean in May 1 595, did by all meanes he could possibly deuise, perswade the vadertaking of this enterprise; alledging so many reasons and so evident. that he plainly shewed, how greatly it. did import France to make a voiage into Portugall: but they would not ynderstand, nor so much as give eare vnto him: Thy destruction is of thy selfe, O Israell. Is not this true?answer mee. Sub. I confesse it; there is nothing more true: and at Cambray, Calice, and Amiens wee haue lost to much, as it is a mockery to speake of three millions, for that the moueables of Calice onely were worth more then a million, and those of Amiens much more. And if the enemy should happen to possessible those two places any long time, the game would foone cost vs more then 13. Millions. Pilg. Now then, if you contesse thus much, and doe know what the issue and effect of this matter wil be, as you say: why do you not that which concerneth you so much, and is so necessary for you? Sub. Seeing you doe presse mee so farre, I will tell you with_ without hiding any of our thoughts from you. The cause is, for that we are vnwilling to hazard and set up the rest of our estates upon the sayings, and upon the opinions of a Notae Nation that is pallionate and in milerie: but we hold it better, to defend our owne as well as we may, rather then expose all to viter ruine and destruction: for to what purpose will it be to fend 12. or 15. thousand men into Spaine. where there is so great a multitude of people? We cannot believe that there can come so great good of such a journy. as you in the beginning of your Treatife would perswade vs: and all the world doth both thinke and speake no leffe: affirming, that it is onely the defire of those (who are tyrannized and in bondage, and doe long to see their countrey delivered from that tyrannicall feruitude) which doth make all things to seeme and appeare easietobee done. Til. O that it would please God to open the eyes of your understandings, that you might know your selves, and that you might be able to discerne the good from theill, the Sweet from the sower, and the blacke from white. It must needs bee a great griefe vnto the Philitions, when they fee that their patients are wilfull and oblinate, because in the curing of them, there is neither reason nor counsell which will feeme pleasing or agreeable vnto them. And in very truth, I doe affure you, that I hold it in a manner impossible for any man (be he neuer to fage, or quick & cleere fighted) to perceive the thousandth part of the griefe and forow which I endure to fee you (my masters) even you of France and England so obstinate, as that you will neither conceive, nor so much as vnderstand, that whereupon your whole saftetie and deliuerance doth depend: that you are to inclined to follow a tracke or by-path, which will throw you downe headlong to a most miserable ruine, out. of which there will be no recouerie. But seeing I have gained so little in speaking to you in particular, and that every man doth talke of these matters in publike, I will now therforeturne my french to the whole world, 130

1.

'To gaine any thing there must be much hazarded.

First, I say, that it is very hard and difficult to put in execution any matter of great weight and importance, without indangering of some things of like kinde and nature: and a man cannot gaine or purchase any thing without some great hazard and adventure. If Marchants should not adventure their goods vpc n the Seas, and commit them to the mercy of tempests and pyrats, or enemies, they would not make fuch great gaine and commoditie as we see them to do dayly:neither should Kings or Princes have need of so many officers, or of lo many cultomers: and the excelling profit which men make both for themselves, as well as for their countrey would soone cease: neither would they so prodigally sped & bestow their goods & their lives in running into so many dangers for the discouering of Lands so farre scattered and remoned from them. If all this be done for the gaining of 10, 15, or 20, for 100, how much more ought you to doe it to redeeme and deliver your selves from fo great trouble and calamitie, and from fo many dangers which doe threaten and menace you? And if you cast your your account well, you shall finds that you gaine more then I oo for one. Thus much concerning the first point of your speech. And whereas you spake of people passionate and in misery: I cannot forget it, but I must and will answer you to that point also. O how it would rejoyce me, if you wold vnderstand, that this is but the malice of the deuill and his followers, to make men beleeve, that that which is told them (how soeuer it be founded upon truth and reason, and those advertisements which are given them for their good and benefit (and which were needfull for them to receive and imbrace) do proceed onely of passion: to the intent he may by meanes hereof hinder and withdraw them from all good actions, and bring them to vtter ruine and destruction.

The condition .of the affailat farre differeth

Secondly, it is most certaine, that the condition and estate of them which are defendants, is much more miferable then shedefendant that of the affailants, because for to defend themselves they shall need greater store of men and forces, then to assaile. their enemies. The reason: for that those which sland vpon their defence, doe not know upon what side the enemy will estault them: and they which do assaile, do well know where the enemy holdeth his principall force and strength: for his defence. For example; suppose that the enemy put: within Amiens 1 00 horse onely, and source or 5000 foot: now for you to defend your felfe from them, it will be need. full that you doe place good and strong garrisons in Abbc. uille, Een, Deep, Roan, Gifors, Gournay, Pontosfe., Beaumont, Senlie, Compenent Han, S. Quintin; Peronne, Carbie; Bologne, Mentreil, S. Esperit de Ru Brancoys, Chermont, and many other places, if you would not see your selfe:rui-/ : ۱۳۵۰ د نند . ned: but affaile your enemie, and then shall you hauethe? aduantage March therefore into Spaine, into Flanders, or This other his dominions that may be nominated, and you that beeffary to past have peace at your pleasure, otherwise you shall have in with an army with shame and dishonour, and you will in the end repent into Spaine. you, that euer you spake of peace. If you stand here ar home vpon your owne defence, you feeke your own ruine and perdition: if you goe thither to affaile him, you shall ruinate and destroy him. Let the multitude of examples which are cuery where in all histories learne you to bee wife; confider well I befeech you that which Scipio (one Scipio of the most peudent and greatest Captaines of the world)

-/IIIO2

The Roman Raid vnto the Romanes: who had lost three great battailes Hannibals against Hanniball: There is great difference and ods (fald: Speech of he) betweene spoyling and proying upon the countrey of Scipio. the enemie, and to see our owne flaming with fire, and spoi-,, led and ranfackt by our enemies. Moreouer, he which af-,, faulteth is more couragious then hee which is put to his defence: adde hereunto, that the feare and aftonishment is ; much the more and greater, ! Where it is not foreseene and ,, prevented. Now as soone as a man entreth within the enemies countrie, he shall soone take knowledge both of the ... good and cuill that may befall him therein, & he shal quick. ly discover the commodities or the discommodities of the ...

H

he to sa. Muguel 1. distinat a Literature with Romans, and take it to your selves, as if he had spoken a vato you, to wit: That they had had good experiencely that which was past, how their warres were al-" water more happy and fortunate, and their armies much "more puillant in the countrey of the enemie, then in their " owne. Hearken to the counsell which Hamiball gaue vncu. Dead. ib.4.

to Antiochus, and make your profit thereof better then he did: Assure your selfe that the countrie of the enemy will yeeld you fouldiers, who defire their libertie : and will :redetus.

turnish you with victualls, and all commodities for your armie. Let the faults and oner fights of others make you wise: doe as Cyrna did, who cast himselfe away by contemning the counsell of Grasu. and by not making any dicar, lib.1. recknoning of Tomyris his enemie. Take heede that you doe not incurre more blame in this behalfe then all others. and it may bee more deservedly; because you have ever. and doe daily, vie too too much to contemne, and not to regard your enemie. Certainly, this is the first and principall cause of the ruine of all cstates, when they contemne and fet not by their enemies: and when they will not hearken to any thing that shall bee alledged to the contrary. For the question is not now of entring into a forraigne countrey, to subdue and conquer it, or to get to bee Lord and Master of it: but onely to restore vnto libertie fo many peoples and nations, who doe crie and call for aide under the yoke and burthen of this tyranny: and to deliver your owne subjects from the armes of the enemie. who hath gotten footing in the best and goodliest province of your realmes and kingdomes. If you doe not as I aduife you, I feare me, least to morrow they will take yet some other of your townes, and the next day another, and so after. wards at one blow will seize upon all the rest. Take heed therefore to that which I tel you: I would not have you for the assailing of your enemie, to leave your selves vndesended; but that in doing of one thing, you do not let passe another: 33. C.

ther:because 4.or 5. thousand men which you men of Guy. en, Languedock, Dauphine, and other prouinces, will not bring you to any such want of men, but that you may have meanes enough to defend your selues both in Picardie and elsewhere.

Thirdly, to depriue a king from his Crowne and scepter, and to disposselle him of his realmes and dominions, do some de when he is a tirant, cruell, or of a wicked, licentious and prine a Prin lewd life, there needeth no great forces.

Two thousand men which Charles the 8. King of France and scepter gaue vnto Henrie Earle of Richmond his cousine german crueltie, an removed (for he was the grand child of Katherine fifter of living. Charles the 7. his grandfather, who had to her first husband Henrie the fifth king of England) were sufficient for the faid Earle passing over into England to gather together men enough to bid battel to Richard the third: in the which Richard was deteated and flaine most shamefully, by reason The cronic of his crueleia and turning of hir crueltie and tyrannie.

Peter king of Castile the sonne of Alphonse the Insticier,
The historic for his tyrannie and many cruelties which hee committed, of Spaine, got the sirname of cruell, and was for the same cause slaine by his brother Henrie the bastard.

The crueltie which Christierne (the second of that name, Many histe brother in law to Charles the fifth) vsed towards the ries. principall and chiefe Nobles of Swethland, made him lose the faid Realme, and consequently also the kingdomes of Denmarke and Norwaie, which he was rightfull king and Soueraigne.

The kingdome of Spaine was taken from the King Ro- The comme derike, a most loose and licentious Prince, onely by twelve historic of thousand Moores, whom the Earle Inlian, Captaine of Spaine. the towns of Septa, procured from Whit king of Barba. ric : who in the yeare 7131 palling into Spaine in Marchants ships; thad for their Chiefe and Generall Tarif Aben Zucas, who being blind of one eye, gauethe name vnto the Towne of Tarifa. which was before called Gartera: and having destroyed the Towne of Seuill, did take and ruinate many others, both in the Prouince of Bœtica, and in Portugall, and did ouerthrow in fet battell a coufin of the fayd king Roderike, which Roderike himselfe afterwards affembling his forces vpon the river of Guadelethe on the seventh of July (or according to others) on the seuenth of September, in the yeare 724, did give battell vnto the Moores: in the which hee was ouercome and vanquished, and immediatly after he lost almost all Spaine. The wicked life of this king was the onely cause of this lotle, and of the ruine of that kingdome, and especially because he had dishonoured Caua the daughter of the sayd Earle Julian, who ypon this occasion finding himselfe griewoully outraged, gaue free entry vnto the Moores by that towne of Septa, which is (as it were) the key of Affrike and Europe. Befides, he did serve for a guide vnto them in that their invasion. At which time the said Mores had very good and happy successe in their affaires in Spaine, by reafon that they found the people not vsed nor accustomed to the warres, as they are not now at this day likewise.

Y#

Antiochous the Great, for his dissolute & disordinate life. at such time as he should have see Greece at libertle, and have made warre your the Romaines; for the allurance & Lecurity of his owne Empire, was reduced to such termes; that he saw himselfe constrained in the end to accept peace of them your such conditions as pleased them. And retiring himselfe out of Lucope and Asia, hewas plad to withdraw himselfe into a corner, as their vasfall and tributary, ance-

Annally . Thildericke for his voluptuous living, and for feeking nothing but for his owne pleasures, lost the Crowne and kingdome of France. By all which examples, fufficing as well as 6000, moe, may be seene how little strength and: small forces there doe need to trouble and ruinate theenemy in in Spains, which hath not at any time inducted men had any Prince so tyrannous and critell, nor of such wicked and licentious living.

Fourthly,

Fourthly, touching your incredulitie, and the opinion which you have, that the love of a mans countrey doth eafily deceive them, and make the remedie of their miseries and seruitude to seeme easie; surely wee may with good reason eall this incredulitie a blind inueiglement, and dark. nesse of vnderstanding: and therefore I come once againe to fay as I have fayd, and I doe againe and againe aduise you, That to fend a good and well conducted Armie into Spaine, or other parts of his Dominions, will be the onely meane to refift and withstand the enemie, to breake the course of his designes, to best downe his pride, and to destroy his puissance. And albeit that this may well be granted to follow, by that which hath beene aboue spoken, yet I will proue it by one other example onely; which being most true, maketh very much to our intended purpose.

Henry, Count of Trastamara, the bastard sonne of Al- The Histories phonfus the Insticier, by the aide of the French had staine the of Castile, King Don Pedro, his lawfull brother. Of this Peter there Portugall, remayned two daughters: The youngest, Isabél, espoused Edmond de Langley, the fifth sonne of Edward the third. King of England. This Edmond having gotten fundry vi-Chories in fau, ur of the Portugals (who accompanied him against the Castillians in Spaine) did manage those affaires with fuch prudence and wisdome, that he constrayned the fayd Henry, King of Castile, to accept and receive of Fernand, King of Portugall (who was in a manner brought to viter destruction, both he and his whole Realme) such condicions of peace as were most ignominious and dishonourable, and very prejudicial both to himselfe, his vassalls. and fubiects. In regard of which his notable deedes and deferts, the said Edmond was afterwards made Duke of Yorke by Richard the second, King of England, his Nephew, the sonne of Edward the Blacke Prince, his eldest brother in a Parliament holden at Westminster in the vere of Christ, 1386. Of these two, Edmend and Isabell, descended the Queene of England, likewise named 1 sabell. The other daughter, being the eldest of King Peter, and called Constance, espoused John of Gaunt, the fourth brother of the fayd Edmond both by father and mother, and Duke of Lancaster by his first wife Blanche, who had by him Henry the fourth, afterwards King of England; and two dangh. ters, of which the eldest, Philip, was Queene of Portugall. the wife of Ivan the Bastard. Of John of Gaunt, and Con. france, was borne one onely daughter, called Katherine, of whom we shall hereafter make further mention. The faid John of Gaunt, in regard of his wife Constance, did entirle · Guaribay, lib. himselfe King of Callile and Leon: and for the obtayning of his right to that Kingdome, hee passed from Gascoigne (which was then under the Dominion of the English) into Spaine with eighteene thousand footmen, and two thou-fand horse; where, with the aide of the Portugals, who

England, &c.

: E5. cap.25.

English, with the Portugals, "into Caffile.

their owne Countreyes.

were his good friends, he tooke the Groigne. From thence he went into Portugal, out of which he entred into Castile. marching even to the Citie of Burgos, which was distant from the place of his departure more then a hundred and The entry and twentie Leagues. And from the time of his first arrivall. inuation of the he tooke and made himselfe. Lord of all the Cities, Townes, and Castles, which hee found in his way: besides, such as being farther off, did come to render and yeeld themselues for very feare and terror. And he might eafily have paffed on much further, if his people had not died, who by reason of their disorder which they kept, and by their ill rule and demeaning of themselves, were oppressed with extreame famine, whereof enfued this plague and pestilence amongst them. And they were reduced to fuch necessitie of Victuals, that they were constrayned to have recourse even to the French and the Campe of their enemies (where then was in fauour of English out of the King, John of Castile, Lewes Duke of Burbon, accompanied with the French forces) of whom they demaunded reliefe, for the fullentation of their poore and wretched lines. The which being perceived by John the Bastard, then elected King of Portugall, he complayned to the Duke of Lan-

Lancaster, telling him, that he held it not good, nor conmenion, that his fouldiers should goe to entreat with the enemie, affirming, that these might more endomage him then the others: and that therefore he should immediately recall them, and forbid them to have any communication, conference, or parley with any of the contrary party; otherwife, that hee would fight against them altogether, and The valour of would cause them all to be put to the sword, the one for John, the Bathe lone of the other. Thomas Walfingham, an English Hi- stard King of ftoriographer, doth set it downe in these very words; and Thomas Walhe fayth, that the King of Portugall had then with him foure fingham. thousand Portugals, well armed.

Some have effected the saying of this Historiographer The valour of as very ridiculous, or as a meere Brauado onely; but they the Portugals. are much deceived: for these foure thousand Portugals, having their King for their Chiefetaine and Leader, had beene sufficient to deseat twentie thousand Castillians.

The same King with five thousand, and so many Portu- An Historie gals, and a hundred and fiftie Englishmen, did defeat the worthie the said Lehn, King of Castile (both of them being present in marking. person in the battaile of Aljibarot) and put him to flight, having with him foure and thirtie thousand fighting men; of the which died upon the place twelve thousand: and there were of prisoners, ten thousand taken by foure thousand, and so many Portugals, and a thousand Englishmen, who remained mafters of the field: for there died in the fight about a thousand Portugals, and fine hundred English, who sought as if they had beene Lyons.

About the same time, Don Nunalures Pereira, Constable This Historic of Portugall, with three thousand footmen and a thousand is well worthin horse defeated fine and twentie thousand Castillians, and flew and tooke the principall and chiefe men of Castile.

The same King, before that he came to reigne, and after-tel of Valverde wards, had many victories upon his enemies, no lesse admirable then that other; infomuch, that a certaine Nobleman of Caltile being in speech one day, and denising with the marking. & the battell was called the bat-

i . i his King (which was the faid 70hn) he fayd vnto him: Sir; I cannot conceine the cause why the King of Portugall, with fo few men, hath fo often vanquished you, seeing that you have alwayes had five or fix against one of them. The King answered him: The cause is for that the King of Portugall doth fight against me, being accompanied with his children, and I combat against him, being accompanied with my subjects; I am King and Lord of Castile, and hee is King and Lord of the Portugals. Euen so did the valiant Alphonsus Henriques, the first King of Portugall, begin to entitle himselfe King and Lord of the Portugals.

An honorable cstimonie of the loyaltie of the Portugals.

This valour of the Portugals was not then at that time onely, but it hath still continued even to this day: for wee our selues have seene, in the yeere 1580, how the King Don Anthonio, with leffe then fine thousand footmen, Portugals, being but even novices in Armes, and young fouldiers, did defend himselfe for many dayes against more then twentie thousand old souldiers of the Duke de Alna.

In the yeere following on the fine and twentieth of July. being S. fames his day, Scipio de Figueiredo de Vastoncelles, a Gentleman whose valour and fidelitie is well knowne. and of whom there is often mention made in Histories. being Gouernour of the Iles of Affores, hee defended himselfe in plaine field with lesse then foure hundred Portugals against more then a thousand Castillians, whom Don Petro de Valiles had made to take land in the Ile of Terceras, neere to the citie of Angra. The Portugals were no fouldiers. but mechanicall persons, handycrasts men, and labourers, and amongst them, there were not ten Gentlemen; for the Gouernour had left them in the Towne, for the defence and gouernment thereof. The Castillians were old fouldiers, amongst whom (as is reported) there were two hundred men who had beene Commanders in Armies of Ca-Rile, and they fought from foure houres after morning, till foure of the night: at which time they caused a great quantitie of Kine to be driven downe from the Mountaines. with with the which they brake the rankes and order of the Castillians, to the intent they might come to handy-strokes with them: and by this stratageme comming to the sword, A good strata. they ouerthrew them. Some of the faid Castillians faued geme. themselues by swimming, many were drowned, and there were buried by just account, 875. Of the Portugals were Anotable viflaine by the hand of their enemies, fifteene; and by the fall corie of the of a wall fixe; and some hurt. The famous Conestagio doth Portugals vprecount this Historie otherwise, but falsely; howbeit, that on the Castilhee confesseth, that there were slaine sixe hundred Castil- Conestagio 8. lians, and thirtie Portugals. But I have heard what passed fol 224 pag. 1. in this encounter of many Gentlemen Spaniards my countreymen, who were present at it, and especially of one that was borne in Valentia, named Don Gaffer, who faued himfelfe by Sea, being fore hurt; and of a Drumme, that was a Castillian; and of a Portugall, borne in Villa Vicosa: the which two onely had their lines faued, being found vpon the Sea-shore, after the heat of the fight was past. There died one of the nephewes of the Duke de Alua, and one of the nephewes of the Marquesse de Santa Cruce, and a nephew of the about-named Don Pedro de Valdes, and that renowned Philip Hartada, an Arragonnois, and seventie more, of fuch as were the eldest brethren of fundry good Houses; of whom, a good part were neere neighbours to Salamanca. To be briefe, there died all the flower of Castile: for that they seeing how Portugall was yeelded wnto them so easily, and having heard that the Iles were very rich, and that the East Indie Fleet was like to fall into their hands, and being allured with the late facke of the suburbes of Lisbon, which was valued at three Millions; they had embarked themselves for this service as cheerefully, as if they had beene going to a Wedding. This is a thing well knowne, that foure or fine young Portugals, from betweene eighteene and twentie yeeres of age, did at Lisbon, with their Swords and Cloakes onely, make no account of a dozen of Castillians. By these reasons men may understand, that that which Walfingham sayth, is not a ridiculous thing, much lette a Brauado. But returne wee to that wee had in hand.

Within a few dayes after, there came certaine Embaffa. dours to the Duke of Lancaster, sent from the King of Castile, who in all humilitie did demaund to have peace; but the Duke would not hearken unto them. Notwithstanding, hunger and the pellilence constraining him to retyre into Portugall, to the Towne of Trancolo, they came againe to seeke him out, being sent thither vnto him the second time by the faid folm, King of Castile, with their former request: shewing vnto the Duke by many good reasons and arguments, the great profit which would enfue of a good peace made betweene them. Thereupon did the Duke gine them audience, and in the end did accord to their demand. howbeit that it was full fore against his will: First, because he was given to vnderstand, that the King of Portugall was willing to haue it so: And secondly (which in effect was the thing that did most vrge him) because he was advertised, that the troubles and warres began afresh betweene the French and the English, and that there were certaine Seditions growne in England, by reason whereof hee should not be able to have any fresh succours from The Castilian thence, whereof it seemed he had then great want: "and constrained to the mortalitie which was in his Armie did now threaten him, that hee should have need of a further supply. The accord therefore was made betweene the King and the Duke in this fort: That Henry, the eldest some of John, named Prince of Castile, should espouse Katherine, the onely daughter of the faid Duke, and of Configures his wife and that they two should succeed in the Realmes of Castile and Leon, and other his Seigniories: That the King should endow both the Mother and the Daughter (as he did) graing to the Mother the Citie of Guadalaiara, Medina del Cam> po, and Ouiedo; and afterwards, being with her in the faid Towne of Medina, he gaue her Hueta alio: and to the daughter for her Dowrie, hee gaue the Esturies, making and naming her Princesse, and his some Prince of Esturie. And from that time forward, the eldest sonne of the Castillian King hath alwayes borne and had the furname of this Principalitie as of Dauphine in France the Dolphin. Besides in was conenanted. That he should give vnto the Duke sixe handred thousand Franks of Gold for his returne into Eng. land, and fortie thousand Franks of yeerely rent, during the lives of him and his wife. Iohn of Castile accepted all these conditions, and that very gladly: for albeit he had France. and the Frenchmen also on his side, and the King of Arragon likewise (with whose sister hee had beene marryed of whom was borne the faid Prince Don Henry and Fernand, who was afterward king of Arragon, against all right and All Spaine equitic and to the premaice of the true and lawfull heires:) with the fix and had also Charles the third king of Nanarre to his cors of Fran friend : yet he knew neuerthelesse that having civill warres against Por in his owne Realme, and Portugall his enemy: hee should ned nowid hazard the fortune of all his estates and dominions, of such standing. power was the Realme of Portugall against all the rest of Spaine. This is most certaine and assured, that at all times and as often as Portugal shall have the ayd and famour of of Portugal France or of England, or of any other strange Prince whatfocuer, the will foone constraine the king of Castile (to whom it is as a bridle) to yeeld a reason, and to submit himselfe to the yoke, and to receive such conditions as shall bee both dishonourable and prejudiciall. And those of the Duke had beene much more to his profit and advantage in this accord, if the king of Portugall had been willing thereunto: because he having the sword in his owne hand, hee might have made partition of the countrey at his owne will and pleasure: he was the judge, and did what seemed good in this owne fight. Hee that hath the sword may deuide the Pluterch in lands as he listeth. Thereof it came to passe, that the Duke departed not very well contented with the King, notwithstanding that he had given him in marriage Philip his eldest daughter. H 2 Op.

The Castilian demandeth peace of the Duke of Lan' eafter in all humilitie.

receive condisiens to his difidaantage.

Apothege.

exhortatito the

Oh that it would please your Maiesties to consider well this that I tell you, and to the which I would willingly nch King, perswade both your Highnesses, and other the Princes and Potentates of Europe, and that you would once know your owne puilsance; and being assisted by your neighbours, with their Shipping, Gallions, and hardie Mariners, with their Artillerie, Munitions, and other furniture for the Warres, and of which they have great abundance; besides. the ready forwardnesse and willing desire which they have to accompanie you, as hath beene most apparant for these many yeeres: you shall finde, that you alone have men enough, and forces sufficient to make your selves the ludge and-Arbitrator of these Affaires: and holding the Sword fall and firmely in your hands, it will be in your powers to make partition of the Realmes and Provinces of Spaine: and you shall be able, not onely to take backe vnto your selves that which is belonging and appertaining vnto you. but you shall make them to render vnto every man his owne. What greater honour? What g eater felicitie can there be ? Defend (Princes) your right, which for so many Ages you have inherited from your predecessors. Therewanteth not euen at this day in your Realme of England, neyther Champions of Saint George, nor other late Cap. taines, luch as Noble Effex, Drake, Candish, Forbisher, Hawkins, Norris, Williams. Likewise in the Realme of France, who neyther wanteth Martelles, nor Pepins, nor Rewlands, nor Oliners, nor Renaulds. In stead of the twelve Peeres of France, you are enriched with more then twelne hundred of the like. Your neighbors for one Richard, will furnish you with an hundreth; and their Allyes will fit you with an Ogier, so fully adorned with all perfections, and so expert and well practifed in the Art Militarie, and so followed with good and valiant fouldiers, that the Constables. of Castile, the Counties de Fuentes, and the Verdugo's, with. all the residue of their companions, shall have no oddes, nor advantage of them. This'

... This is the right and direct way: this is the most certaine and most assured means to have a good and happy peace: euen by the strength of your owne armes, withour the vie and employment of any supporters. You shall give lawes vnto the enemy, according to your owne will & defires: you shall force him to accept of such conditions as shall be profitable and commodious, not onely to you and your owne realmes, but to your friends and allies also. What can the enemy doe, if you should passe into Spaine with an armie well furnished of all necessaries? and being The qualities ledand conducted by some Prince which may bee chosen of a good Gr and named by your Maiesties for chiefe and Generall of nerall, the same, such a one as shall bee descended of some great and ancient house, and of noble bloud; and accompanied and adorned with fuch graces and raregifts, as may eafily draw others without any difficultie or grudging, to submit themselves to his comand; and one that shall be able to gouerne with great prudence and wisedome? without doubt the enemie would hold himselfe vtterly forlorne and vindone, (as indeed he should be no lesse) and hee would esteeme himselfe happy and well apaid, if we would fuffer him to remaine Lord of Castile: he would restore ynyour Maiesties the realme of Nauarre and surplus of that which he and his predecessors have vsurped vpon France: vnto the most excellent Duke of Loraine, he would restore the Realmes of Naples, Sicily, Arragon, Valentia, and Catolonia, and such other signiories as are dependants of the same: and the Realme of Portugall, to whom of right it appertaineth. And he would be brought to doe reason vnto the house of the Duke de Neuers, of the Duchie of Brabant, of Limbourg, or Lothier, and of the towne of Antwerpe. Likewise it would constraine him to restore the Palatinate and Zwitzerland.

If you should demand of mee, on what side it were most fit and commodious, and conucnient to enter into Spaine: I Gy, that if you would enter by Nauarre (whereof his Christian .

: . 1

٤.

Christian Maiestie, is the naturall and lawfull king you should even at this day there finde the grand children of them which have loft their lines and their goods for the ferdice of his ancesters, and many others likewise who doe loue and defire him, as their rightfull-king and Lord, and will incurre all worldly hazards and dangers for him, especially he being turned true and perfect Catholike.

If by Arragon, the wounds thereof are yet so fresh, that the bloud thereof doth yet, even now feem new to abound. If by Portugall, the fores are yet open in the quicke flesh, and remaine altogether vnheaded, and that with fuch griefe and dolour, that even those verie hands which should offer to touch them (though it were to remedie them) would make them to quake and tremble : for,

Horrent admotas vulnera cruda manus.

And as it is a verie difficult and hard matter for a ficke man, being in captinitie and servitude, to recover his health: fo it is impossible for any man (though he should live a hondreth yeeres (to feethole two nations, the Portugall and Castilian, to agree and loue together: notwithstanding the king of Castile doth at this day entreat the Portugals (in comparison of his ordinarie and natural crueltie) with some gentlenetse, and doth maintaine them in their priviledges and liberties. For proofe whereof, leaning an infie Carman nite number of reasons that might be alledged, one onely shall suffice; and that is, because the Castilians are extreme e Portugall proud and acrogant, the Portugals too too impatient, when their honour is any way touched or in question, for then they will fooner grow to blowes then to words.

ezient.

The French Translatour

This is a thing most certaine and assured, and the Thissugals do so regard their honour, and they are so ambitious of the same, and it is so recommended unto them from the father to the some: that if they should lose but one ist thereof, they would grow starks mad, as men that had lost all sense and understanding. Fernand de Magellan a Gentleman of Fernand M Portugal, upon an opinion that his King had done him much gellan his Wrong, did conceine such a despight thereof, that he fled great impat from Portugall, and retired himselfe to the King of Castile, purposing to discouer unto bim the emerprise of Peru. Now fee the folly, or rather madneffe of the man; his discontentment proceeded of no other matter but of this: for that the King had denied to give him a pension onely of halfe a Duckat monethly for bis some : for the custome of Portugallis, that: all the Gentlemen shall take a pension (which they call Moradia) of the King, according to the degrees and qualities of their Nobilities, (which they doe properly call Fuero:) and they are to bee enrolled in the bookes of the Kings house, which shey call the Booke of the Kitchin, or the Booke of Matriculation. The qualitie of Magellan was to bee one of the Knights of Hidalgo (that is to fay) Feal, or one that doth Pentrie: his pension was every moneth three Duckats: and hee had a petition to the king, that his some might be admitted into the same qualitie as himselse was, and that he might have the like pension. Of these demands the King granted the one, The reason and refused the other: for he accepted his some for one of his why Magel Knights Feal : but bee would not gine any more then two lan did disce Duckats and a halfe for his pension, observing therein the of Peru to the custome of his, predecessours, who did not use to give to the lung of Cast children so great a pension as to the fathers, saue onely when by the death of their parents they came to succeede them in their inheritance. And for as much as in Portugall the manner is, that the Nobles have their place and precedence according to the degree and qualitie of their Nobilitie: and they which are of one tike degree and qualitie, doe take their place each of other according to the quantitie of the pontion, more or lesse, which they receive. Magellan did take in se smill part this refusall of the King, made unto het:

his some of halfe this ducket, onely because by meanes bereof be should lose his precedence, that he became most foolishly enraged, as a man that bad loft all fense and understanding : and to how the extreme griefe and forrow which be tooke for the loffe of so small an bonour, he purchased to himselfe the name and estimation of a Traitor, and for such a one doe all bistories recount him : because he did not performe that dutie and denoire to bis king which he ought him, but did give it unto a stranger: and be was the occasion that things came to that passe, that the two realmes of Portugall and Castile, were upon the point to have fallen at variance each With other. So that so was the extreme and ambitious defire of honour which made Ma. zellan thus mad, and will worke the like effect with all true Portugals: and it was not the desire of getting a little peece of money, as some have taken it, and have not been assamed to fet downe as much in writing, for the matter and subsect incident bereunto doe shew the contrary. I speake not this without cause, for that S. Goulart de Senlis in his translation ins. printed at Paris by N. Bonfons in the yeare 1587, and in the three and twentieth Discourse, doth affirms as much. The words edeeds of Oforius touching this matter, are these: Notwith Randing muel king the Portugals, for that they are unmeasurably desirous of honour, and doe thinke that their Nobilisie is greatly increased and augmented by the adding of a little money unratheir living: shat they do oftentimes imagine, and are persuaded that they ought stoutly to fight and contend for such a small summe of money, as if their whole safetie, reputation and dignitise did depend thereupon.

II ai

This being to: you will fay perhaps, that it is greatly to be wondred at how the Castilians should then bee able so easilie to subdue and conquer the realme of Portugall as they have done, the same being so great and so puissant a Monarchie. Hereunto I answer: that it would be a long and redious matter to recount all the realous thereof: and in vesie trueth it so happened, rather for want of resolution. then for any defect of colour or courage: for the Castilians are not better fouldiers then the Portugals, as we have before flewed: and it did well appeare, how about five thoufand foot, and some thousand horse did desend themselves for the space of source moneths and twenty dayes, against more then twentie thousand old souldiers vnder the Duke de Alua, the others being but new fouldiers, and plaine country peafants : and if there had not beene such abun- The reason dance and store of treasons, it may bee that the Duke him- why the Chi selfe had found but bad entertainment, and woult have pas. lians took Pe fed any further. But Portugall was altogether unprovided of sugal so easil Chieftains and leaders: all of them being lately flaine in A. frica with their king, as Conestagio in the end of his first Conestagio. booke doth sufficiently set downe vnto vs, where he hath 1.fol. 49.pa. thele words; Sebastian Went into Afrike, leaving his realme quite and cleane without mony, without any of the Wobilitie, without any to succeed or inheritit, and in the hands of such Governors as were but badly affected towards him.

The Translatour.

In this battell died the Duke de Aueyro, great grand. child of Don Iuan the second king of Portugal, two Princes bis cousine germans, one of the sonnes of Theodosius Duke of Bragancia, and one other that was heire to the Marquifat of Ferrara, and foure Counties, as it is reported in the life of the King Don Sebassian by a few, named Duard Nonnes de Le- Duard Nonon, who, contrary to the lawes of Portugall, Which excludeth a lew his book all lewes, and such as are descended of the lewish nation, from al of Censures, honors & dignities, yet was made of the Councel of the realme &c. of Portugall by the King Catholike, who preferred him to that honour, onely in recompence of a Booke Which hee made, called the Booke of Censures; and is not onely most infamous but full of hereticall unadnised propositions : it was written against Frier Ioseph Texere, a Portugall, of the order of thei Friers Preachers; who is at this day a personage greatly: renamney

rier Ioseph igal his comicadazion.

renowned in all. Europe, and knowne of all the Princes of Chriexerca Por- stendome both Ecclesiasticall and secular; and especially in France, where the chiefest and greatest persons of the realmen and all men of honour doc lone and gladly entertaine him, for his honest conversation, faire conditions, and singular dollrine: be being a man the most accomplished in the knowledge of bistories, and in the genealogies of great personages, of any lining at this day: as his worker and or linarie communication doe sufficiently testifie. I doe much wonder at the patience of this religious man, who being so exquisitely seeme and practised in histories, so expert in matters of State, and so icalous of his benour, as we know him to be, that be doth not fet hand to his pen, and write, not onely ugainst the errours and untruthes of this few, but even against the Catholike Maiestic also: see. ing it was his Maiestie that caused this false and infamous booke of Censures (whereof we speake) to be made against him: and he did anow the sam: by his princledge given thereunto in the yeare 1590, permitting the fayd few to imprint the fayd booke (intreating of the Genealogie of the Kings of Portugall) after be had translated it into the Castilian tongue, out of another which he had formerly made in Latine by the commande. ment of the faid King Catholike : in the which booke the few did of set purpose, forget to name and set downe, among st them that died, Don Emanuel de Meneses, otherwise de Almada, Bishop of Coimbre, and another B: shop Don Aires de Silva, Bishop of the Citie of Port, and consengerman to the Regedour of Portugall (Which is a dignitive representing through. out all that Kingdome the person of the King, in all causes of Infrice, both cinst and criminal) both which Bishops were if. sued of the royall House of Portugall: so were also the Baron. of Portugall, and the County de Prado with his eldest some, besides some other Lords and Princes, neere kinsmen unto the Kings of Spaine.

The residue of them which remained vossaine in Barbarie, the Castilian with gifts and faire promises had so corrupted, that they defired nothing more then to deliver vp the Realme vnto him. The Knights of the Launce (which are those whom we in France call Esquiers, and in force of Porwhom consisteth the greatest force of Portugall,) did in a tugall wherein manner stand still looking on, not having any other com- it consistests. mandement; which was long of the negligence of the King The negli-Anthonio and his Councell, who did alwayes shew them-gence of the felues very varefolute and inconstant in the administration king Don And of their affaires: by meanes whereof the Realme of Portu-thonio and his gall is fallen into this so piteous and miserable estate, not counsell. knowing how to recouer her former liberty: there was none that had any faithfull affection or defire to oppose themselves against the enemy, saue onely the Ecclesiasticall. and Regular persons, and some few of the nobility. And though the people (who were both without experience. and without armes) were likewise of the same affection, yet had the Castilian by his policy and fraudulent devices drawne them into his power, by giving out a false bruit and report, that the Souldiers which did then leuv and affemble in Castile, were onely to passe into Affricke against the Infidels, for to revenge the death of his Nephew Don Sebafiam: which notwithstanding were in very deed for Porrugall, as the successe did make manifest: for hee began to make those his preparations for that attempt as soone as the King Don Sebastian did beginne to make provision for his voyage; to whom he having promised five thousand Souldiers and fifty Gallies, when it came to the issue that hee should have had them, he vtterly resused to give him Conessagio l. any, to the intent he might the sooner attaine to that hee 1, fol, 18, pa. 2 defired. And besides, falling to an accord and agreement with Muley Maluco, hee promised in the treaty made with him, that he would abandon the poore King of Portugall: and to that effect did the Moore promise him cer! The Castilia taine Townes in Barbary, which he had before offered to kingaccordet the faid Schastian, vpon condition hee should not give with an infide any aide or succours to Makemer Xereffe. But that the Callifi King.

his word to the said Xeriffe to helpe him. Surely Sebastian was more true of his promise then his Vncle Philip, who to compasse his affaires the beteer, and to get that into his hands, which he had of a long time most ardently defired, 1084elity did assure his owne doings by the breach of his conscience. his faith, and his promise, in refusing to give those succours, which hee had promised vnto Sebastian: and more then that, in commanding by a publike Edict or Proclamation. that none of his Subjects should follow him, nor serue vnder him in that voyage. And this doth Conestagio give vs euidently to vinderstand in his second Booke, where hee aithe At that time there arrived in the Campe the Captaine Francisco de Aldana, Who had promised the King Sebastian so forme him in that iourney: who to that effect had gotten leave and livence of the King Catholike, which no other could obtaine mestagio 1, fol. 14. ...

of him.

The Translator.

melile. re

Concstagio Writteth, that Philip meeting with Sebastian at our Lady de Guadelupe, did not disswade him from the enterprise of Barbary, but onely that hee should not goe the her in person I for Philip knowing the generosity of this young Prince, faw very well, that if he did once undertake this voyage, there would nothing binder him, but that himselfe would goe in proper person: and therefore to the intent he might conceale his iff intent, and so excuse himselfe to the World, hee did in shew discounsell him from going, but not from undertaking of the enterprife.

It seemeth that his Sorcerers by the meanes of the Diwell (who is very skilfull in coniectures) had prognofticated vnto him the loffe and ouerthrow of the Christians. Thus you may see how even before the departure of this poore Prince, he did then prepare himselfe to swallow vp and dewoure that morfell which hee so much esteemeth and lo-meth: and for preferuation whereof he is at great costs and to keepe Porexpences, and feareth not to worke exceeding great mil- tugall to himchiefes vnto all Christendome, and to make peace with the selfe, doub Infidels, to the intent hee may the more commodiously works many make warre vpon the Christian: in so much, that hee doth all Christeneuen now triumph in the good successe which the Turke domehath against them. His reason is; because, seeing how the Popes holinesse hath embraced and received to fanour the most Christian King (whose ruine he desired more then his owne proper safety,) and that the Princes of Italy doe seke his friendship and amity (which I hope they will doe continually, in regard of the publike good that may ensue thereby: he judgeth, and not amisse, that it may turne to his domage and detriment, and that it may be an occasion to breake off the course of his great designes and enterpri- Viz. The fes. For this cause doth hee reioyce at the losses and misad House of Auuentures of the Christians: notwithstanding that the mis- stria, which is chiefe doe light upon his owne flesh and bloud: in so much, indamaged by that the prosperity of the Infidels maketh him the more the Turke, proud and haug ity.

And this is it, that hath made him so hardy, as to give ill The Embassa entreatie to the Embaffadour of Venice, if it be true that dor of Venice is reported; if hee be not hindred, ere long hee will give i'I intrested by worse entertainment to all other, without any except the Castillian. tion of persons. Hee thinketh that Almaine and Italie especially, in their afflictions and troubles, will have need of his helpe and assistance: by reason whereof, he is perfwaded, that they will not resolue themselves to follow and fauour the partie of the most Christian king: by meanes whereof hee shall bee well able to effect his affaires in France. If hee had beene disposed to hinder the Turke from making warre in Europe, hee might very well haue done it, by molesting and disquieting him in the East Indies as the true and lawfull kings of Portugall haue done. Hee needed have done no more but have joyned with Xatame the great King of Persia, the friend of the Portugals, for to keepe the Turke in awe, and within compaffe.

The victorie of Scephende Cama against the Turkes.

Gama made inany knights

Don Iohn de Castre

Infinite are the praises, wherewith Historiographers have celebrated the victory which D. Stephen de Gamaa Portugall, Gouernour of the East Indies, did obtaine a. gainst the Turke, vpon whom hee made warre for that effect and rurpose. This battell was fought at the foot of Mount Synay: after which the faid Gama made many Portugals knights, for bearing themselves valiantly in that batat the foote of tell: amongst the which there were two of special marke; Mount Sinar, who being islued of noble parents, did leave behind them an immortall memorie of their honour and glorie. The The victory of one of them was called Don quande Castre, who afterwards being Vicerov of the faid East Indies, did get that famous victory, which you may read of in the life of the king Don Emanuel: in the which with leffe then foure thousand Portugals, he defeated an infinite number of enemies, and put to flight Moiecat an Conlable of Cambaia; who being fent by the king Mamud his Lord and maister with foureteene thousand men to succour the citie of Din, which held the Portugals befieged within the Castle: he was constrained to leave 300, of his men dead upon the place: hauing lost the Guydon royall, with all their baggage. Iuzor_ can the yonger (a great Lord in those parts) was taken prifoner, and Raman the Gouernour of the said citie, (which was great, goodly and populous) was there slaine: and the Portugals made themselves absolute Lords of the citie. Of this valorous Captaine, Don luande Castre, who is now at this present in France, is the grand child: and he also hath beene as faithfull to his king and countrey, as the faid Don Don Lewes de Inan his grandfather. The other of those two knights was called Don Lewes de Alsaida, afterwards Countie of As Altayda.

Anno Dom. . 15.48. 24. .Apull.

the imperial Guydon, which the enomies had once gained:

he furmounted all therest in that iourney, and recovered tougnia, who being in Almaign at the battle which the Imperialists gaue to the Duke of Saxonie, and the Princes of his partie, Charles the fift did him great honour, by reason in so much, that the Emperour gaue him all the honour of this victorie, according as himselfe wrote vnto Don Juan thethird, king of Portugall, his brother in law, and cou- Don Lewes de fen German, who had fent him thither for his Eubassador: Altaida Goand this noble man was twice Viceroy of the East Indies. uernoar of the East Indies. East Indies First, in the life time of Don Schastian, at which time hee the first time, defended it against all the forces of Asia, both Moores and Paynims had made a league against the Portugals, who both by defending themselves, an assailing of their enemies, did purchase perpetuall and immortall glory. Afterwards being made Viceroy, the second time after the Viceroy the death of the King Schastean, during the raigne of King second time, Henry: and knowing that the people of Portugallhad cho. fen and appointed certaine Gouernours to gouern and defend the realme after the death of the said Henry, and that they had named certaine Iudges also to decide the cause, touching the difference upon the succession of that kingdome: he said openly; I for my part will not yeeld up the Indies to any other, then to whom the Realme of Portu-His faying, gall shall be adjudged. Insomuch (as some say) that they touching the (which followed the partie of the Castilian:) knowing possession of well that the ludge would never admit him to the fucces Portugall and fion of Portugall, and being drawne on by the counfell, per- the East Inswassons, and faire promises of the Castilian himselfe. which were fent vnto them over land: (adde hereunto the notable diligence and industrie which he vieth in all his affaires. They caused the said Lewes to bee made away with poyson: so died that valiant and faithfull Portugall; and Don Lewes there succeeded him in that gouernment a most vngratefull de Alcaida and notable Traitour, who presently after deliuered vp the poysoned. Indies to the enemy. To the intent the happy memory of Don Stephan de Gama might be preserved, there is an Epitaph set in a Pallace builded by Gama himselfe (after his returnefrom the Indies) neere to the towne of Setuval in Portugall, which in the Portugall language, though somewhat glossely, is thus written:

Quem

phan de ima his itaph.

Quem Canelleyros armou O pé do monte Sinay, · Veio acabar aquy.

That is to fay:

He which made so many Knights, At the foot of Mount Sinay. Here (as you see) now doth he lie.

But to our purpose: At this day Thilip hath more force, more puillance, and many more commodities, to hinder the Turke on that side of the East Indies, from making warres in Europe, then all the other kings of Portugall haue had heretofore. How beit, as that is not the way to aduance his ambitious desires: so cannot he abide in any case to heare thereof. For, though it were a good deede and well done : yet it will not be any helpe vnto him towards Perrugall, the most great and noble puissance, and hee esteemeth it as the of Spaine.

the preservation of this his Monarchy of Portugall, which he hath vsurped with so many fraudulent deuises and vnlawfull meanes: and which he prétendeth to leaue vnto his heire, be it by right or by wrong: for he knoweth it to be of recious pearle most rich, precious, and important pearle of his crowne: of the Gowne . & indeed to it is. And therefore I cannot but grieve at some , that hold themselves to be wise, and of no small judgement and understanding; both French and English, who will not in any case be perswaded, but that Portugall is a very small and barren countrey, and no greater then Normandie. And fome others (who shew their ignorance) affirme it to bee as great as Brie onely : neither will they beleeve nor agree, that Portugall is within Spaine; but that it is a countrey feparated therefom: and they will seeme (for sooth) to reason and discourse hereupon, breaking their owne braines about it, to the trouble both of themselves, and those that he are them. These my manisters doe constraineme to become a Geographer in this discourse; howbeit, that I make no profession of that science: neuerthelesse, because it maketh to our purpose, it will be requisite, that we make a generall description .

description of that countrey, and recount some special particulars thereof, to the intent the greatnesse, riches, fertilitie, and puissance thereof, may be the better knowne and discerned.

Portugall is a part of Spaine, situated upon the maine The descrip-Ocean: and it extendeth to the Westward from the East tugall. 115. leagues, and from the South to the Northward 25. leagues. On the North side thereof is the realme of Galicia: towards the East, it hath the Provinces of Taragen, Lusitania, and Bætica: and to the South, it is bounded with that part of the Ocean Sea, which lieth towards the coast of Affrique. It containeth foure principall Provinces: the first la Transtagana, which encloseth the realme of Algarba: the second, la Cistagana: the third, betweene Duero and Migno: and the fourth, la Tronsmontana. These foure Provinces contains part of the Province of Taragon, the greatest part of Lusitania, and a part of Botica. It hath in length 5. degrees and a halfe from North to South, and beginneth at Cape S. Vincent, in 37. degree, taking a little of the 36. and endeth in a manner in 42. and a halfe, not farre from Bayonne de Vigo: and it extendeth from the South South East, to the North North East, where every degree containeth 19. leagues and a halfe: and it hath commonly in bredth 40. leagues, in some part lesse and some part more. The leagues are not reckoned accor- Ofthe great ding to the leagues of France, but by the leagues of the mefe of Perdegrees: each of which hath from North to South seuenteene leagues and, according to the accompt of Portugall: and so having regard what is overplusse, and what is wanting, the country of Portugall is fully fortic leagues in bredth: so that making a Figure quadrant of fine degrees and in length, drawne from the North North East, to the South South East, and of fortie leagues in bredth from East to West, it will enclose within it all Normandie, a good part of Beaulce, the Duchies of Maine and of Aniou, the greatest part of Tourayn, in a manner all Poiceau, and almost L !! .

almost all Xantogne, and some part of Angolesme, with a part of Perigort. And this we shall see cleerely by demonstration, if we make the said Figure quadrant in France of 5. degrees and in length, and 40. leagues in bredth: the forme thereof will bee thus: Draw a line from the Angle on the East side of the quadrant, and where it hath the North at the head; and it will begin at Crotoy vpon the river of Somme (which is in 50, degrees of elevation) euen to Lybourne in Perigort (which is 44. degrees and a halfe) passing neere by Roan, by Eureux, Dreux, and Amboise, neere by Chastellerauld, by Coue, and betweene Negre and Iarnac and Angolesme, and between Barbesseux & Coutras, till you come to the fayd towne of Libourne: All that countrey which is in the West of this figure, is as great as Portugall. And to the intent, that this which I fay, may be the better perceived, it shall not be amisse to describe the rest of the Figure. The quadrant which hath his head towards the North, and beginneth in the East at Crotoy, drawing toward the West, endeth in the Sea, a. bout 6. leagues off the Sea coast of Cherebourg, and so pasfing by Constance and by Graundville neere the towne of Dol by the villages of Becherel, Redon, and Arebon, and entring into the Sea betweene Guerrand and Croific, enen to 44. degrees and a halfe, to the East of the sayd towns of Libourne 10. leagues from the land, which is to the South of Anchifes: wee shall come to have our Figure perfect. Moreouer, because there may be no doubt in this demon-Itration, we will answer to an objection which may bee made by those which will not that Portugall should bee greater then Normandie, and that is, leeing the line from the west side of our Figure passeth by Cherebourg, Constance, &c. so as it commeth into the Sea betweene Guerrand and Croisic; what shall be done with the land which remaineth, which is a little part of Normandy, and endeth neere the Isle of Alderney, and from thence alongst the greatest part of Brittaine? Whereunto I answer, that 3]] biections.

all this land, and all the countrey which remaineth there, may be put within the West Angles of the Figure, which are voyd, because they end within the Sea. Now this demonstration being well made and understood, and being compared with the greatnesse of Portugall, we shall finde Portugal that her circuit is not only as great as all the'e Provinces of great as France, which we have spoken of, but even as great as all land. that eircuit which is comprehended in the Isle of great Brittaine, which we call England.

As touching the fertilitie of Portugall, a man may easily judge thereof by that which Strabo writeth of it Thesert speaking of Lustrania, which is the greatest part of the of Portu fayd Realme, faying, Lusitania, is a Region most fertile Straboli in fruits, in cattell, in gold and filter, and many other like commodities. And the Provinces and lands which the Portugals possession Spaine out of Lustrania, are held to be much more fertile, then those of Lusitania it selfe: as the lands which they hold in Batica, in the Pronince Tronsmontana, (which the common people call Traslos Montes) and in the Province betweene Duero and Migso, which the Latines named Interannis, and which (the fayd Strabo) against the common and true opinion, placeth within Lustrania. And he sayth surther; in Lustrania is the river Lethe which many call Liman, and some others Belion: wherein he is deceived; as also in saying that Mi-which are in Lustania. There are in Portugall three Archbishoprickes, and ten Bishoprickes: all which, even at this day doe bring to their Archbish Prelates about 400, thousand Ducats of yeerely rent. The Portugal countrey for the greatnesse thereof is well peopled: the their rea Duke of Bragantia alone in one Cittie, and in the Townes, ning surpasseth all the rivers of Lusitania in greatnesse: for Lyme is that in within the Prounce that lieth betweene Duero and Migno: which Provinces (following the true description, are enclosed in the Province of Taragon; and Migno is much leffe then Duero, Tago, and Guadiana,

cassles

gantia.

edominion Castles and villages (of which hee is Lord) hath 200000. he Duke of vaffals. Portugall fendeth into the East Indies, Barbary Ca. pe de Verd, the Isles of Buan, Mina, S. Thomas, Congo, Angola, Brafill, and other places some 6000. men yearely, of whom, the third part neuer returneth home againe into their countrey. If Philip durst at this day put any confidence and trull in the Portugals, he might draw out from Portugall, to fend vnto his warres more then 1 00000 men from the age of 25. yeares to 40. who having nothing to hinder them from going, nor have any excuse not to obey him, if he should command them.

It is not vnknowne to the whole world, that in the time of Sebastian king of Portugall, there were throughout all that realme 1200, companies of footmen, in the which there were none enrolled nor mustered, but onely the people of that countrey, Artizans, handicrafts-men, and such like mechanicall persons and laborers, and yet not all of them: the Noblemen, Gentlemen, officers of inflice: the the governours of cities and rownes: the students and such as professed learning: in sum, all the Nobilitie, the Ecclesia. sticall and regular persons, with their seruants, and many other forts of men priviledged were excused and exempted and were not bound to enroll themselves in the sayd Companies: of which the most part consisted of 200 men, some of 300, and of 400. Let vs allow to each of them 200 men onely, and they will amount to the number of 240000 men. Confider then how great the number may be of them. which were not bound to be enrolled in those Companies. I doe not here make any mention of the number of companies of Horsemen, of which this Realme hath a great quantity, because it is not possible to know the certainty and truth thereof.

number en fit for e in Por-IL.

Treatmes

Moreover the Kings of Portugall are fo great in one rel spect, that therein they exceede all the Kings and Princes of Europe, and that is, that they are able in leffe then a quarter of an house to give vito their vallals and subjects ro

15 or 20 Millions in tickets, confishing in dispatches for Gouernorships, Captainships, receits, and other charges and Offices, and for ligenies to make voyages by Scato Banda, Malucco, China, and other parts of the East Indies: by meanes of which dispatches, they which doe obtaine them, doe recouer the faid fummes of money immediatly.

Hereby may a man easily judge the greatnesse, the riches, and the puissance of this Realme, whereunto adding the Reigniories which it hath and possesseth in Affrike, Asia, and America, and in the Ilands which it holdeth in the Ocean Sea. it maketh a most notable, great and puitsant Monarchy: and therefore I maruell not though the King of Callile doth commit such excesse, and is at so great costs and expences for the keeping and preserving of the same: he knoweth full well how much it importeth him, and of what value and worth it is vnto him; he is not ignorant, as one that knoweth not the estate of things, but on the contrary rather he is wife, aduited, very politike, and well experienced in affaires and matters of state.

The Translator.

This thing Anthony de Perez (Secretary of efface to the Anthony Pe-King Catholike Don Philip the 2. the man bere spaken of) rez. 2. doth she we us in the second part of his advertisement, upon the noint of the processe made against him, where hee entreatesh of the dissimulations, deceiss, and subtilities, a sed by the said Philin toward Don Iohnde Austria his brother, upon pretence of the Realme of Tunes, and the intelligences of England, at such Don Iohn de time as he sent him into Flanders: Where (as the report is) in of poylon, the end he caused him to be poysoned.

Befides, the faid Philip is notably addicted to Cosmography: for hee hath in his Palace of Madnil, a very great Philip much and goodly House, wherein are the descriptions of all the given to Cos. Prominces and Realmes of the World not onely in generall Maps, but even in particular: the e doth hee spend the most part of the day, and contemplating and beholding those descriptions, he doth whet on and augment his ambition, and extendeth the bounds of his tyranny: there he feeth what is most fit and convenient for him, and most easie for him to conquer: there he feeth by what meanes he may take Cambray, and how afterward he may obtaine Calis, and what reason he hath from thence to leape over to Amiens: and thus doth hec consider and deuise with himselfe what will the most for his profit and advantage, in such fort that nothing can escape his hands, and that hee may not be at charge, nor hazard his meanes in vaine, and to no purpose. feene in Histo. He is also well seene and much conversant in Histories; and by them hath he scene and different how much it doth import him (for the attaining to his defire) to have the Monarchy of Portugall, and the Portugals at his deuotion, to the intent hee may have the aydes and fuccours from thence which both hee and his predecessors have heretofore had nothing with. from them: for during these 300 yeeres past, the Castilians out the Portue shaue done nothing worthy of memory without them.

The Castilians for thele 200 yeeres past haue done

Philip well

rics.

gals. The warre of Salado.

The chiefe cause of that famous victory which they call del Salado (where were partly taken, and partly flaine 400 thousand Moores,) and onely 20 Christians (as was reported from the mouth of Alboacem himselfe King of Maroc. , quo) was the King of Portugall Alfonjui the 4. called the Braue, and his Portugals, the which Alfon, w. at such time as the Moores belieged Tariffa, gaue succours to Alfonsus King of Castile, called the Insticier his some in law, not because he deserved to be ayded, but because the warre was against the Infidels.

The warre of Granado in the yeer 1501,

. At such time as Alfonsus de Aquilar was slaine in Granado, and that the Moores remained victors, and purfued the victory, the Portugals did hinder them from palling forward: and keeping the field where the battell was foughten, did saue and preserve the rest of the Castilians.

When the peoples of Gastile did rise in armes vnder pretence of the common and publike good, and many great. i ords

Lords and Princes with them against Charles the fifth, by The communalty of Careason of the great, excelline and new exactions and imaging of Careason of the great, excelline and new exactions and imaging of the inarmes. posts laid vpon them: the Embassadors of the said Princes, against Charle and of many Cities and Townes of Castile came to the the se King of Portugall Don Emanuell, praying him that hee would vouchfate to take and acknowledge them for his vaf. The true amisals and Subjects, for that they were desirous to have him by of Emanuel to their King and Lord: but he would not or ely not receive King of Portheir offer, but he gaue them good counsell and admonition, charles the 5. shewing them how they ought to conforme themselves in obedience to their King. And to other of the Princes, Cities, and Townes of Castile, which taking part with the faid (harles, came unto him likewise for his ayde, he gaue them both money, artillery, powder, and other munition for the warre. Some say that the said King Don Emanuell did lend them 500000 duckats, and many peeces of artillery, which was an occasion that they which were risen in armes, did fall to an accord and agreement with their Prince: and thereof it enfued that Charles the fifth did 4- Auno 1522. gaine vsurpe the Realme of Nauarre, which Mounsieur Andrew de Foix had before restored and set at liberty: the King Don Emanuel neuer suspecting nor doubting of any such matter intended by him. And Philip now likewise for his part hath rewarded Portugall with the like good tuine; as hee hath done the like to France, and now lately a great part of Christendome, to whom he was not meanely bounden.

When the said Charles the fifth passed to Goletta in the The taking of yeere 1535, who tooke it? That did the Gallion Cagafuego Colena with of Portugall, which the King Don John the third had com- 12 other thips manded to accompany the Infant Don Lewes his yonger of warre. brother.

How came it to passe that the same Charles the fift tooke The taking of the Towne of Tunes, the capitall and chiefe City of the Tunes, Realmoof Lybia? was it not with the assistance and ayde of the faid Infant and his Portugals ? odW ne taking of ignon de illes by the ortugals.

he warre of ranado finied by the ortugals. Who was it that tooke Pignon de Belles with the residue, not aboue 35 yeeres since, for the King of Castile? even Francisco Rireto, Generall of the Gallies of Portugall, and the Captaine Diego Lopez de Sequeira his Nephew, with the Portugals of his company.

Who finished and gaue an end to the oppression of Castile, in the behalfe of the Granadians that were revolted in Granada in the yeeres 1566. 67. and 68? That did 7 or 8 thousand Portugals send for a succour by the King Don Sebastian. Philip King of Castile knoweth all this full well: and that is the cause that he laboureth and paineth himselfe with so grear care and diligence to keepe this Monarchy of Portugall, pretending not onely to vsurpe it, to tyrannize ouer it, and to plucke it by force and violence out of the hands of the Portugals, but to take from them also their honour, their glory, and their valour: for hee feeth well, that having the Portugals on his fide, hee shall be able by their meanes to fatisfie his ambitious humour: and yet shall they not have the honour due vnto them for their prowesse, but hee attributeth all to the generosity of his Castilians. hath he tyrannized, and doth yet still tyrannize ouer the honour of the Arragonnois, the Catalans, the Valentians, the Nauarrois, and other the Nations of Spaine: and onely his Castilians (which cary the name of Spaniards, and are so called by those that are ignorant, and know not the difference that is between the feuerall Nations of Spaine,)they (I fay) are those Lyons, those Tygers, and conquerours of the World. But we will come to the conclusion of this part of our Treatife touching Portugall, the most precious and chiefest pearle of his Crowne. It was my chance to be one day in his company with a personage of great estate, who is daily at great charges, and doth I pend good store of duckats to have notice and intelligence of that which passeth abroad in the World: and hee did affure me for a certaine and vindoubted truth, that one of the greatest favourites of the King of Castile did demand of him this question: What Should. should be the cause that he suffered Freezland, and many A question Townes of other Prouinces of no small importance to be moved by a lost, and to fall into the hands, and into the power and subiection of Heretikes; by meanes whereof they were con- Caffile. strained to forsake the true Religion, (athing worthy to be lamented) onely to succour the Princes and Townes of " the League, and to entertaine the warre a foote still in France? Whereunto the King smiling; answered: Let them alone: let them take Freezland and all the rest: that which The answer of most toucheth me is the keeping of Portugall: which if I the King of doe, as I hope I shall, I will cut them out so much worke, and Castile. give them so much to doe in their owne Countrey, that they >> shall not easily come neere mine, and I doubt not at length >> but to have the rest also: for know this; that if I keepe and » possessed Portugall in peace and quietnesse, they shall not » onely not be able to live without me, but I shall make them » in the end to be my subjects, and to become tributaries vnto > me: and therefore let it not grieue you to see what is lost, > for all will be recourred well enough in time, and leaue the >2 care thereof to me alone.

The French Translatour.

Philip seeing himselfe Lord of so great a Monarchy, doth aspire by all meanes he may to the Realmes of France and of England, and of other Provinces: and he doth reape so great contentment in his ambitious thoughts and purposes, that hee cannot but discover his conceit in that behalfe: insomuch that not onely they of his Councell, but his particular private Souldiers doe know it. After the taking of the fle of Terceras, the Captaines which accompanied the Marquesse de Santa Cruce in that iourney, said openly: Now that we have all Portugall, England is ours, and by little and little wee shall gaine France also. Por proofe whereof wee have neede of no other witnesse, then that which his owne Writer Concretagio saith in contimuing his Historic before the taking of the said Terceras, Coneffagio tib. Tin fine.

where he bath these words: But the King having so lately gotten the possession of Portugall, and seeing the Portugals not yet very quiet, he thought it belt to pacifie that Realme. before he intended any other enterprise. And he said, that by keeping his men in armes in those quarters, hee should bridle not onely Portugall, but all Spaine and France it selfe also, and it may be hee would not otherwise have failed to have fent a good part of those forces even for England, at the least for Ireland.

Portugall the of all the Warres.

By those last words about ysed by the King, and the forprincipal cause mer recited examples, may be easily discourred, not onely the ingratitude of this peruerse and vn pleasing Catholike. but wee may also collect and gather, that Portugall is the principall cause of so many warres, so many murthers and mischaunces: and that if the same were wrung out of the hands and power of this tyrant, the most Christian King, and the other Princes of Christendome should dwell in peace, the Potentates and common wealths of Europe should be in rest, the Cardinals at Rome should not be at his direction, nor the elections of the Popes at his will and pleasure: ouer the which he doth so tyrannize, that in each of them he maketh himselfe the first person: and (as the faying is) preferreth himselfe before the holy Ghost. There is neuer any election of a Pope, but he nameth some three. doth german. foure, or five persons, to the end that the Conclave of Car. dise the electi- dinals should choose one of them: was there ever seene Cardinals and greater impudency or presumption, that a mortall man should dare vsurpe Gods office? Ha, most Christian King, it is the part of your Maiesty, to defend and maintaine the sourraigne and chiefe Bishops: they are in their possession to be defended and preserved by the most Christian Kings of France: and to that end have they endowed them with so great priviledges, liberties, and prerogatives. Banish therefore and drive away (Sir) this monster, breake the head of this Serpent, tame this Lyon, and deliuer the Charch

How Philip ons of the Popes.

Church from this so tyrannicall servitude and hard captinitie. Restore vnto your pupils their wonted peace and liberty, to the intent they may with hardinesse chastise the euill and vicious, and without feare reward the good and vertuous. How often have the soueraigne Bishops defired to honour and doe good to some persons, in recompence of their vertues and merits, and to correct others for their vices: and have not been able to performe either the one or the other? Oftentimes against their wils haue the Popes permitted the wicked to triumph, and more often have they confented that the good should endure afflictions.

Who did better deserve to be made a Cardinall (if I may not say Pope) then that famous learned man, Do-Ctor Martin Aspilcueta of Nauarre, whose memory Martin A shall be eternall, both for his doctrine, and for his holinesse cueta a 1 and vertue? Neuerthelesse onely because Philip could not warrois. abide him, for defending against him the cause of that reuerend Prelate Don. Fra. Bartholmew Carrance, a reli- Fra. Bart gious person of the order of S. Dominicke Archbishop of mew Car Toledo: and for maintaining also with many and strong Archbish reasons, that the Fortugals ought of right to choose their King by election: and for prouing by most firme and infallible arguments, that his Catholike Maiesty, did possesse the Realme of Portugall by vniust and tyrannicall title, was therefore thrust out of all, and dyed in the estate of a poore and simple Priest. Who did ever in all reason deserve better, or more worthily to be strangled and burnt then N? and vet because Philip would have it so, hee liveth still and triumpheth. Wherefore, most humbly I beseech both your Maiesties, euen for the honour of GOD, (wherein your selues have more interest then any other) that you would vouchsafe to attend this matter of so great importance: and that you would vidertake to key and make ready a good Armie to passe into Spaine; and to consider withall, how great is the prudence, the industry, and subtilty of this common enemy: that your Maiesty would regard his actions, his ambition, and his tyranny: that you would awaken and grow to a resolution, knowing that you have lo great a tyrant to your Neighbour, as of himselfe alone is greater then all others that ever were, or which now are in the World, all of them fet together: and who hath gotten, (like his predecessors) all that which he possesseth, by pure and plaine tyranny: which is indeede so proper and naturall vnto him, and doth belong vnto him as properly and vnfetral to Ph a us is laugho a man.

parably, as laughter doth to a man.

Giue me leaue, I pray you, to proue that which I speake. by most cleere and certaine Histories, to the intent I may take away all occasion from those (who are addicted to ill speaking, and to deceitful dealing) to thinke or take me for alyar for this that I say, may be verified by all the Historiographers of Spaine, both ancient and moderne, which are worthy to be credited, or have any truth in them: some of which doe live yet at this day, and it is no long time since they made their workes, and imprinted them with the fauour, and at the costs and charges of the said Philip. And this I willendeuour to proue as briefly as I can, and I will shew how in all the Realmes and Provinces which the King Catholike possesseth in Spaine, (whereof I my selfe being a Spaniard, doe know somewhat) hee possesseth and holdeth them by tyranny, committed many times and often. And for as much as to prove that which I intend, it shall suffice to touch onely that which hath happened since the 380 yeeres last past: I will not speake of any thing that hath befalve before the yeere of Christ 1217.

tile tyrand the first

Henry King of Castilethe some of Alphonson the noble, dying, left his eldest sister Blaunch Queene of France, which was the mother of S. Lewes, who was then but two yeeres old: and his Father (who was not yet King of France) was occupied in the warres of England. whither ibay. lib. 9.41.

whither hee was called by them of that land against their King called King John, who was reputed for a tyrant. Hen_ rie being dead (as is sayd) his youngest sister named Berangera, the wife of Alphonsus King of Leon with her sonne Fernand encroched upon the possession of the Realme of Castile, and vsurped it against the right of the sayd Blanch her eldest fister, and consequently against the sayd S. Lewes her nephew.

Fernand being dead, Alphonfus his eldest sonne called Emperour of the West (because some of the Electors of the Empire had elected him, whereas the residue had chosen Richard the brother of Henrie the third King of England) made an accord with the fayd S. Lewes the coufen German of his father, touching the succession of Callile in this manner: That Fernand the eldest sonne of Alphorsus should e'pouse Blanch the daughter of the sayd S. Lewes, with condition, that the children borne of that marriage should inherit Castile. Of them twaine were issued Alphonsus and Fernand, who were deprived of their right by Sanche their Vncle, the yonger brother of their father Fermand, who died having the government of the Realme of Castile tyran-Castile and Leon, in the absence of his sayd father Alphon-nized the 2. , swhich then was gone into Italy, there to follicit his I conthe first friends, and to make meanes for the Empire. As soone as time. Fernand was dead, the fayd Sancho tooke vpon him the gouernment, getting the possession of many cities and towns ferom Gudiel in Castile, against the will of Alphonsu his father, who dy- in the History in Castile, against the will of zappronyme installer, who are of the Girons. ing at Seuill, vpon a friday the 2. of Aprill 1284. curfed Garib lib, 13. his some Sanche, calling him disobedient, rebellious, vsur- cap, 16. per, and a tyrant, and pronounced and named for the true and right heires of his Realmes, and Seigniories, his grandchildren Alphonfus and Fernand: and in case they should die without children, then Philip the hardie King of France . his cousine German remoued, the sonne of the sayd S. Lewes his Vncle. But neither the curses nor denuntiations of the father, nor the feare of God, could make Sanche to render or reflore to the others their right, but he still detained it, and left for his heire his some Fernand the sourth of that name.

Alphonsus surnamed the Justicier, king of Castile, the sonne of the say d Fernand, and the grand-child of Sancho, amongst many tyrannous acts by him exercised, is reported to have committed one act most vnworthy not onely of a king, but of a man even of most vile and base condition: for that it was an action full of notable treasons and infidelitic. For having invited Don Iuan le Tuerto, (that is to say, the squint eyed) Lord of Biscay, to dine with him, he caused him most cruelly to be murthered in the yeare 1327. And albeit, he had begun to discharge himselfe of this murther for a season, yet he could not disguise nor couer his tyranny: for that afterwards hee caused him to bee condemned as a traitor, and confifcated his lands and Seigniories: and within a short time he seized upon them all:namely, about a fourescore townes and castles.

The same Alphonism caused Don Aluar Nugnes Oforio his Gouernour to be flaine, who had before received of him many great honours and favours; and afterwards being as certained of his death (which was in the yeare The Countie, 1,228) hee seized upon all his livings, Castles, and great Treasures, and vpn the Countie de Trastamara: and within a few dayes after, he caused him to be condemned thereof saine. at Tordehumos as a traitor; and having made him to bee digged vp out of his grave, hee willed his body should bee burned, and his goods confiscated.

Henrie the 2.2 bastard sonne of this Aiphonsus Count de Trastamara slue his brother Teter. (of whom we have formerly spoken) and possessed himselfe of the Realmes of Castile and Leon, disinheriting his Necces Constance and Isabel, who with a folemne oath had beene acknowledged time, & Leon Princelles and heires of Callile, first by the estates assembled at Seuill to that end and purpose: and afterwards at Albuberca 1 363. And if it had beene true, that thefetwo

listera

Don Juan le - Tuerto Lord of Pilesh mar. thered.

> Gariba.lib.14 Cap.4. . Biscay tyran .. nized.

. de Trastama. res viurped. The Countie Garibilib.14. cap.s.

Caffile tyran" mizedthe third the accord time.

sikers had no right in the said realmes, because hee alledged them to be bastards: by the same reason, had the sayd Henrie much lesse right and interest in them: for he was not only a baltard, but murtherer also of his owne brother. And in such like case was Fernand King of Portugall the great grand child of Sancho about named, right inheritor to the faid realmes; as was the king Don Peter his cousine german removed, and cousin german also: for Beatres the mother of Peter, was the filter of Peter the father of Fernand. For this cause Samora, Toco, Cindad-Rodrigo, and other citties and townes of the realmes of Castile and Leon, did call in the faid Fernand, and offered to receive him for their king: especially the realme of Galitia, which was wholly resolmed to render it selfe vnto him. And for this reason did Fernand goin person to take possession of the Groigne: and he The History might as well have feized vponthe other places and holds, of Fernand king of Pora If the Portugalls would have confented thereunto. For they tugall, anno did parposely oppose themselves against the desire and will 1,69. of their King, for two reasons: the first was, because they had good tryall and experience, that there wanted much of thit valour in Fernand, which was in the father and his auncestors: the second was, because the Castilian The Ports-Nation is formaligne and percerfe (as the Portugals doe gals have an hold it for a maxim; among themselves) that it is dange-ill opinion of rous to have any thing to doe with them; yea to have any the Castilians. command ouer them, as hath beene before touched. And I lay yet once againe, that their nature is so maligne and peruerse, that the venome and poyson thereof doth so spread it selfe abroad, that they which are their next neighbours and borderers doe feele the reverberation of The malignity. their malignitie and malitious disposition: insomuth, that of the Castifome of them, when they leave and abandon their owne lians. countrey, and doe withdraw themselves into strange and forraine lands, are more wicked and malicious, more dangerous, and more to bee feared, then the very Callilians themselues.

In the yeare 1474, after the death of Henrie the fourth king of Castile, Habel the sister, the wite of Fernand king of Arragon, did most tyrannically get possession of the Realmes of Castile and Leon, and of their other Seigniories, excluding fane the daughter of the fayd Henrie her brother: who in the yeare 1461. had been acknowledged Princetle and inheritrix of the faid Realmes, for default of heire males, in a full affembly of the three estates, which were affembled to that end at Madrill, by the commendement of her father. And the first persons which tooke the oath of fidelitie, and did so acknowledge her, were the infant Don Alebor (m, and the fayd 1/2 bel, the brother and fifter of the fayd king: after whom all the refidue did the like, every one in order according to their degrees. And aftenthat shee was againethe second time acknowledged Princelle and heire of the fayd Realmes in Val-de-Locoia, after diligent enquiry made vpon the legittimation of the fayd Princesse, which was done by the Cardinall de Alby a Frenchman, who to that effect was come into Castile by the commandement of King Lewes the eleventh of France: the which Cardinal in the presence of all the Princes and Lords of the Realme, having caused the mother to be sworne and take her oath, demanded of her, if the Princesse Dame Jane her daughter, were the daughter of the King her hus band: whereunto shee answered upon her oath, that shee was. Secondly, the King (which tooke the same oath, and) protested that he did fully beleeve and assure himselfe, that this infant Dame Fane was his daughter, and that in all certaintie hee had continually so taken and reputed her ever fince the was borne; and therefore he did wil and command that the oath of fidelitie and obey sance, which was vsually accustomed to be taken in his Realmes and Dominions, as Guarib.lib. 17. due to the eldest of the Kings children, should be made vntoher. These are the very words of Steuen Guarshay: Hierome Surite (who is yet living) doth rehearse this historie very plainely and distinctly in his generall history of Spain, and how Henrie being ready to yeeld up the Ghost, did Hierome even then maintaine, that the said Iane was his daughter and that he commanded his Consellor openly to reuale it. And the said Guarday affirmeth that Henrie did consesse himselfe the space of a good hower, before his scule departed from his body, and that he being in good and perfect quietresse of sense, and of a sound and good memory, after he had named the executors of his last will and testable than an amed the Gouernors of this Realm, which ad given commandement, that his semants should be payd out of his treasures and iewels, he named the said Princesse Iane, for the vniversall heire of all his Realmes and dominions, calling her by the name of his daughter, and recommending her with all his affection to the sayd Gouernours.

cap. 24.

By that which hath beene sayd, it appearest clearely, that the Realme of Castile, in lesse then 258, yeares hath beene tyrannized source times, and that of Leon thrice, and all the other Realmes and Seigniories likewise, which are dependants of the same: the which the king Philip possesses the same this present day by a most vniust, wrongfull and tyrannicall title.

This also is one thing worthy to bee marked, and (which may be seene by the histories both of the same authours, and of divers others) namely, that when there hath happened any difference or disagreement upon the sayd succession, they which have beene in possession, have altogether prevayled, and made their title, even by the right of those very parties whom they have dispossessed which is the greatest tyranny that can bee. And that this may the better be perceived, I will alledge onely two examples.

Rodrigo Sanches Bistop of Palance recounteth, how in the life Ishn: the first King of Castile and Leon (of whom wee Ishn the shaue before spoken) steing that sichn of Caunt Duke of king of Ca Lancaller, presended the layed Rechines of Castile and Sa cunning hathe ring of ile. Leon to appertaine vnto him, for the reason heretosore alledged; hee said in desence of his ciaime, that the sayd Realmes did of right belong vnto him, as being the sonne of lane and the Grand-child of Don Inan Emanuel and of his wife, who was the daughter of Fernand de la Cerda, the lawfull heire of the sayd Realmes: because his brother Alphonson was deceased without children, and that for this cause hee did hold them with a good conscience, and that he did not hold them from his tather, whom himselfe consessed to be abastard.

policy of and the nd King tragon,

The other example is like vnto the former. For in a great affembly of Princes, Lords, and other principall personages, held in the towne of I regillo, for the taking of the eath of fidelitie to Fernand the second king of Arragon, and Isabelhis wife Queene of Castile, the sayd Fernand pretended that hee had more right or himselfe, then the fayd Isabet, and that hee ought to be acknowledged as the true and principall heire of the fayd Realmes of Callile and Leon, not as husband to the laid //wil, but as discending in the right and lawfull line male of the kings his prede-· ceffors, because hee was the sonne of John the grand-child of Fernand, and the great grand child of John the first: who on the side of his mother lane the grand daughter of Fernand de la Cerda (as hath I cene sayd) was the true and rightfull heire of the said Realmes. Habel knowing the intent and ambition of Fernand her husband, refolued to bend and employ all her force and puillance for the maintaining of her right: and for a reply to his speech she said: That that which hee had spoken was to bee granted, if women, had not beene viually admitted to the fuccession of those Realmes: but seeing the custome was to the contrary, therefore her said husband ought not to bee preferred: and for proofe of that which she sayd, she named certaine women which had succeeded to the said crownes: amongst others Katherine the daughter of Conflance, and of John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster about mentioned, Where where she did assure her selfe had beene admitted, and received to that inheritance as the grand-daughter of her graund-father Peter, and that Henrie the husband of the faid Katherine, her ancestors, had right thereunto onely by meane of the faid Katherine his wife. For these reasons Habel was preferred before Fernand, and the was acknow. ledged as the true heire of the faid Realmes of Castile and Leon, and he reputed to have right onely as her husband and companion, and not otherwise. And this is it which Marin Sicilian speaketh of. In this assembly of estates (saith he) Fernand seeing himselfe king and Lord of the Marin Sicimost of two third parts of Spaine, partly in his owne right, and partly in his wives, and having there prefent all the Lords and Deputies of citties and townes, which were their subjects, he did endeuour by all meanes, to cause himselfe to be entitled king of Spaine: but those of that affembly would in no case yeeld their consent thereunto: but to the vttermost of their power, did oppose themselves a gainst 1t, and did thereupon give vnto the kings of Callile a new title, which Philip holdeth and retaineth at this day, having augmented those Realmes and Seigniories, which both the faid Fernand and Charles the 5. his father did fuccelliuely viurpe each after other.

The Translator.

Philip Caried on with the same winde of ambition, as were his great grand father and his father, upon an exceeding de. Philip caried fire which hee had to vsurpe this title of King of Spaine and away with the secing that the Realmes of Spaine Would not accord nor agree his ancestor, that he should so entitle himselfe : and that in the assembly of causeth himestates (which he beld in Portugal in the years 1581, within selfeto becalthe towne of Tomar) it was expressely defended him, and that led king of himselfe had taken a solemne oath, neker more from thence. forth to take it upon him: nevertheles he caused for all that (like a notable tyrant) certaine monies (Which he coined in the Indies and in Flanders) to be engrauen with this superscription: Philippus Hispaniarum Rex: wherein hee imitated the sayde Fernand his great graund-sather, who tooke so great pain: s, to gaine or rather to usurpe this honourable title, that many strangers of forraine nations did liberally give it unto him, who neither knew, nor would understand what advantage the same would bring unto the tyrant, and what detriment the nobilitie, peoples and prounces of Spaine should suffer, by allowing the same title unto him.

2000

So that herein may bee seene most apparantly, the notable tyranny of the predecellors of the king Catholike now raigning: who, after they had for a while suppressed the right of others, to the intent themselves might tyranize ouer those Realmes: yet would afterwards seeke agains to reuine, and to retaine that very right, and title which they had before most iniuriously vsurped. A thing certainly, which may induce vs rather to figh and to lament, then to conceiue any pleasure and delight, to see the Princes of the earth, which beare the name and title of Catholinkes, to bee menerthelesse so bad Christians, and so insupportable tyrants, as is this Philip the King of Castile. Which is the cause that all the Ecclesiastical and regular persons of Portugall doe hate him so extremely, that when the commandement was given them, that in certaine of their prayers, and in their Canonicall houres, they should expressely pronounce the name Philip (for the King knew well, that vader the name of King vsed indeterminately, they did in their hearts understand and pray for Don Anthonio.) They tooke his commandement in foill part, that they could not bee brought to doe it. But in the end they feeing themselves pressed by the commandement of the Bishops and Prelates, they did at length pronounce his name, but with fuch disdaine and in dignitie, as I am ashamed to speake it: norwithstanding because these matters doe well concurre together, and it is not from our purpose; and besides, because hee that shall rehearse them, is not to be blamed for the reciting, for that hee is bound to represent them onely in manner and forms as they were done, I have determined to recount vnto you two examples concerning this matter, of the which we doe now intreat.

The Archbishop of Lisbon having given out and published the Kings commandement afore mentioned, through out all the Churches of Lisbon, in the yeere 1582, the first of Ianuary: vpon the day of the three Kings next ensuing, a certaine Curate, as he was saying a solemne Masse in his Parish Church, with great pompe and solemnity, and the Church full of people, when hee came to the end of the prayer which is vivally said after Gloria in excelsis: in singing of these words, Et Famulum tumm regem nostrum (that is) thy servant our King; he suddenly stopped, and turning himselse towards the Deacon and Subdeacon, he spake vnto them with loud voyce. Tell me, tell me, how call you this Divell: And they answering him, Pholip, he named Pholip, and so went on with his Masse.

At the same time it happened that a religious person of the order of S. Dominicke, making mention of the King in a certaine prayer, without naming him by his name of Philip, and being commanded by his Prelate, under paine of contempt and disobedience, that he should name him by his proper name: he then repeated it, saying; Et Famulum thum regen uastrum Philippum, Ducem Albensem, Sanchum de Anila & Rodericum Sapata, caterosque ommes diabolos, &c. That is to fay: And thy feruant our King Philip, the Duke de Alna, Sancho de Anila, and Rodericke Sapata, and all the other Divels. When I rehearled this voto a Nobleman of good account, with whom I communicated the greatest part of this discourse, hee wondered greatly, vsing this exclamation; left, doe the Priests and Religious perfons of Portugall thus hate his Catholike Maicily? This is a strange thing, and I maruell much that they hating him so extreamely, and being of such strength and puissance in their Countrey, (for the most part of them are Noblemen and Gentlemen, and some of them great Princes) that they doe not cause the people to rise in armes against that Tyrant. I answered him, the cause is, for that albeit they have neuer fo just a cause to take armes, yet the Portugals are a people of great patience and fufferance towards their. Prince: and they doe also goe to the warres with so ill a will, (howbeit, that being once in the warres, they proue very good Souldiers) that they had rather goe to hanging. Neuerthelesse, if they should once rise against the Castilian. they would defend themselves in such manner, that hee fhould neuer more be able to suppresse them.

-SITESTIKS

The whole substance of the matter is: that they doe once grow to a resolution, and that they fet hand to the worke: which if they once doe. I believe that they will make as great a wall betweene Portugall and Castile, as they of China did in times past make betweene them and the Tartarians: and if it were but onely to content the foule of their King John the second, named, The man and King of peace, who was the scourge and plague of the Castilians: and of him is yet spoken that old prouerbe; If the Chicke had not man and King come, the locke had beene taken. This Prince knowing the manners, the life, and the ryrannical actions of the Castilian, was wont to fay, that hee did greatly defire to fee betweene Portugall and Callile, a wall reared up so high, as might reach up to Heauen; protesting, that the thing thar most gricued him in this World, was: for that the Sunne did first passe by Castile, before it came into Portugall: and that which made him quite and cleane out of all parience, was, bécause he knew not how to remedy it.

The Nobleman, to whom I recounted all thefe things, giving me great thankes, faid vnto me! Certainely I am very glad, and doe thanke you heartly for acquainting me with these particulars, which are things worthy to be remembred, and such as I have not at any time heard or seene written.

John the 2. the scourge of the Castilians, named, The of peace.

The griefe and discotentment of King lobn the 2.of Fortugall.

written. But I doe not vnderstand (quoth he) what should be meant by that prouerbe aboue mentioned: If the Chicke had not come, the Cocke had beene taken: as that also which you have spoken of the loyalty of Auila and Simancas in Castile: of Celoriso and of the Castle of Coimbre in Poraugall: and of the King of Castile and the Castilians, and of the Cities and Townes. Monsieur (quoth I againe) 1 would gladly declare the same vnto you, but I feare lest I be blamed for making fuch long digressions: for I am so well acquainted with the disposition of men, that I am not ignorant in how many parts of this my discourse, they may accuse me in that behalte: and therefore I pray you to suffer me first to make an end, and then after the conclusion of this Treatife, I will faissfie your defire particularly and at good leyfure: for I doe assure you, I would keepe silence concerning many things in this worke, were it not most requisite and needfull that they should be spoken of and published. for the better attaining to that which I intend and purpose: the which (I doe periwade my felfe) that both you my masters of England and likewise of France, and you also my masters the Princes of Europe (who are all of you highly interessed in the greatnesse of the Castilian) will embrace cheerefully, and with open armes, if you be not altogether without judgement and vnderstanding. But it is now meet, that we pursue the proofe and demonstration of the tyranny of King Philip, which calleth himselfe the King Catho-

We have lately shewed, how King Philip by vsurpation and tyranny, non solum in modo, sed in genere, (as the Civilians vse to speake) of his predecessors, doth possesse the Realmes of Castele, of Leon, of Galicia, of Toledo, of Sivill, of Cordona, of Murcia, &c. with some other Provinces contained within the precincts and streights of his Realme. Let vs now come to the Realmes of Aragon, of Valentia, the Councies of Barcelona, of Cerdo-rica, and Sardinia.

Cerdonia, and Roussillon, and the Isles of Maiorica, Mine.

Aragon, Valentia, & e, tyrannized.

Firnana the Infant of Castile the graund Father of Fernand above named, viurped all these Realmes and seigniories, of the which he deprived Isabet Countesse of Vigets his owne Aunt, sider to his Mother: which Isabet had also one Daughter named Isabet, which marked with Dan Peter the Infant of Portugall, the younger some of selm the bastard King of the said Realme. Of Peter and Isabet was borne to e Lord Don Peter. Considered Fortugall: which Don Peter, by reason of his Mothers right, and of her auncesses, was called and acknowledged by the Catalognians, for their King and Lord. And after hee had reigned over them for the space of sue yeeres and more, he was poysoned by Isabet the fecond of that name, some of the first Ferdinand, whom we named to be the successour of Asphansus King-of Arragon his elder brother.

The I ord
Don Peter Conflable of Portugall, and King of Aragor, poyloued
by John.

Charles the 4. the rightfull King of Nauarre, empoyfoned by his flepmother.

This Iohn was a notable Tyrant, and her retained the Kingdome of Nauarre tyrannously after the death of the Queen Blaunch his wife, the right heire of the said Realme, against the rightfull title of Charles his owne sonne, vnto whom that Realme ought to have descended, by the death of his mother: as it did likewise tall vnto Lewes Huein by the death of his mother Jane, who dyed eight yeeres before her Husbard Philip the saire. For this cause the said Charles (being a most curreous and vertuous Prince) had great difference and suite with his Father, who caused him to be poysoned by his stepmother Jane, the Daughter of Don Federike, the second, Admirall of Castile.

The Translator.

The grandmother of King Philip on Charles his Fathers fide, was the graund daughter of this Iohn and this Iane; from Whom principally bee hath learned and retained the art and science of poyloning so perfectly, that not onely to the sud Iohn

Iohn the Graundfather of his Graundmother, and to the said Iane his wife, but even to all his predeceffors, he may give forty fine, and a fault at that game, and yet be no loofer; were they ne.

wer so cumming in that art and science.

Of Peter Constable of Portugall and King of Aragon, there was no lawfull iffue remaining: for the line of Habel his mother, was extinguished in John the second, King of Portugall: by reason whereof, the right of that Realme, and all the Seigniories depending thereupon, ought to descend, and doe appertaine to the most excellent Dukes of Loraine, as the true and rightfull heires of Yoland Dutchesse of Aniou, The Duke of the wife of Lewe, Grandfather in the fift degree of the said Loraine, the excellent Duke of Loraine now living: the which Yoland right heire of was the lawfull Daughter of lohn King of Aragon, (theel-of Arragon, dest sonne of Peter the ceremonious King of that Realme. who was also the Father of Martin, which raigned after the said Iohn his clder brother,) and was the true heire of this Crowne, and of all the demaines thereof, by the death of her elder fifter, the wife of the Earle of Foix, of whom thee had neither fonne nor daughter.

The Realme of Nauarre was vsurped, (as is reported by diners Historians, euen Spaniards themselves) vpon false Nanarre vsueinformations by Fernand the great Grandfather of King ped. Philip, which Fernand was one of the Masters of Machianel, (as Bart belinew Philip doth tell vs in that Booke which Fernand the, he caused to be imprinted in the yeere 1 585, where he hath one of the mathese words:) Those Princes which dofully resolue themselues flers of Machito prenaile and grow great by force of armes, ought to smitate anell. the Catholike Don Fernand the fift of that name, King of Ca. In his Booke stile, Who held himselse apart, and game the looking onto the of the Coun-warres, which the Princes of Christendome made one upon and cellers of Printher, to see what iffue and what forces they should have, to the ces. intent bee might aide and succour those which were weakest: Dis. 14. par. 12. and bee would not suffer any to grow great or puissant in Italys. Who pretended to be Lords and Commaunders there, neither mould hee at any time enter into any leagues, made, by the ري زون

the Kingdonie

Princes

This was Lewes the 12. of that name.

Princes of Christendome, valesse he might make some profit and benefit thereby unto himselse. For this cause he would not make warre upon Lewes King of France, when Pope Iulius, the Em. perour, and the Swiffers did warre against him, for that hee thought he should not aduant age himselfe by the diminucion of that Realme, if the adversaries of the said Lewes should make themselves great by his losses: and yet being perswaded that the Let the French fasd French King would augment his estate, by making warre upon the Realme of Naples, hee entred into league agasust the King of Fraunce, With the Emperour and the King of Eng. land.

King and the Princes and Potentates of Europe confider this well.

The Booke (whereof I speake) was dedicated by the Authour to Albert Cardinall of Austria, when hee was Vice-roy of Portugall, who is the third Graundchild of the said Fernand, both on the Fathers and Mothers side.

Portugal and her demaines tyrannized.

Now how Philip himselfe hath tyrannized and vsurped the Realme of Portugall, and the Seigniories which are dependant thereupon, raising himselfe into a great and mighty Monarchy, and yet ill confidered, or knowne by strange and forraigne Princes, all Bookes in generall doe found it torth: and the Universities of Coimbre, of Bologna, and of Pisa, and many learned personages have adjudged it to Kathe. rine Dutchesse of Bragancia in Portugall, the lawfull daugh ter of the Infant Don Edward brother to the mother of his Catholike Maiesty: which Katherine is at this day yet liuing, and hath foure sonnes, good and sound Catholikes. learned, wise, goodly, and couragious Gentlemen, and two or three daughters. And the Vniuersity of Pauy hath adiudged it to Raynuncia, now at this present Duke of Parma, the some of Mary the eldest sister of the said Katherme, the faid Mary being deceased a long time before her Vncle Henry. I suppose that I have most cleerely and sufficiently shewed the tyranny which all Spaine hath endured and suffered under the predecessors of King Philip the Catholike: and as for that which the West Indies Bath suffered under humselfe, as also all the rest whereof hee dockexitW

١.

The fonces of Katherin Dutcheffe of Bragancia. z.The Dake Theodolius: 2. Edward. 2. Alexander. 4. Philip.

write himselfe Lord, by what title and pretence they have beene gotten, it is well knowne even to the little children. who doe openly cry and speake of it in the streetes: and both Naples, Sicily, Millan, Vtreich, Guelders, Zutphen. and other the Provinces of the Low Countries, and the Countries of high Almaine, (all which have beene tyrannized by him and his Auncestors) doe manifestly prove and verifie it: so that it seemeth vnto me, that I have made good and fufficient proofe by these Histories and examples. that tyranny is the first and principall heritage of his Catholike Maielly, even of Don Pholip of Austria; and that it is as proper and naturall vnto him, as laughter is vnto a man, and that it belongeth varo him properly and insepa. rably. Wherefore now that wee haue made knowne his tyranny, me thinketh it would not be amisse, nor impertinent to our purpose, (most Christian Kings) to entreat fornewhat touching his cruelty: for afrauch as Spaine did. neuer yet find his like or equal, as the flesh and bloud thereof hath too too well tried, and had the experience.

All Bookes, all men, and euen his owne mischieuous and wicked actions, doe every where yeeld open and abundant Of the cru testimonies of his cruelty. If Iulius Calar (as it is reported of King Ph of him) were cause of the death of more then a million of men, they which have been acquainted with the carriage & behaviour of this tyrant, will confesse, that he hath been the death and destruction of a farre greater number. Casar was extreamely grieded to see Pompey his enemy dead. And as Antigonius when his sonne Alcinous presented him with the head of Pyrrhu. Slaine at the entry of the City of Argos. did sharpely reproue him, (Filiumg, refarium & barbarum Plutarch, vocanit Jealling him a wicked and barbarous sonne: so Ca. far in imitation of his example, seeing the signet and the ring of Pompey, did of pure compation fall a weeping, in so much as he was resolved to make warre vpon Ptolomey, because he had slaine Pompey traiterously, and hee did so much, that hee caused him in the end to be the instrument of his owne death.

the death of his servants, friends, cousens, nephewes, brother, some and wife: but hee doth rejoyce and triumph at the same; yea, he doth procure and advance it, giving great summes of money, excessive rewards, and great honours vnto the executioners and ministers of his cruelty: and for the satisfying of his pernicious ambition, when there is any thing whatsoever, be it never so little that toucheth him, he maketh no exception of persons; be it Pope, Nuncio, Bishop, Monke, or other Ecclesiasticall person, hee poysoneth them all, without feare of God, or shame of man.

The Translator.

Of his fernants and friends he hath caused to be made away the Counties of Egmont and of Horne, the Lord Mountigny, and the Marqueffe of Bergues, With many other Noblemen and Genelemen, whose bloud is yet fresh in remembrance: the Prince of Orange, Marke Anthony Colonna, Don John de la Nuca great fufficier of Arragon, the Duke de Villa Hermosa, the Marquesse de Fuentes, Don Iohn de Luna, &c. bis Consin the Emperour Maximilian, his Nethewes by his Sifers, Don Sebastian King of Portugall, and Don Alexander Farnese Duke of Parma, Don Iohn Duke of Bragantia, bis brother Don lohn de Austria, his sonne, the Prince Charles bis eldest sonne, his wife Isabel, Sister to the three last Kings of France deceased, Pope Sixtus the fift, Alexander Formenti. Nuncio in Portugal, fent thither by Pope Gregory the 1 2. as he was on his returne towards Rome, in his passage through Caffile. Of Bishops, Monkes, and Ecclesiastical persons, Don Bartholmew Carrance, Archb. of Toledo, of Whom We have lately spoken, being his owne master, a man of so great authority and excellency, that by the pace of many yeeres Spain hath not brought forth his like. This good Catholike was the cause of his imprisonment, so strict and so long, as all the world knoweth: this rood Christian, in imitation of Nero, did persecute this personage dsiw be Archbi.

op of Tole

with most notable hatred and rigour, till such time, as for verie griefe and forrow he died at Rome: the Doctor Frier Hector Pinto, Provinciall of the order of S. Icrome in Portugall, and ordinary professour of the holy Scriptures in the Universitie of Coimbre, whose great, learning is sufficiently witnessed by the most godly and grave writings which he hath sent into the world being imprisoned in Portugallby the commandement of his Catholike Majestie: some of his friends (who were Well affectioned to the Castilian partie) did earnestly intreat and perswade him to retract and recant that which he had publikely read and preached: and to declare, that his said Masestie was lawfull heire of the said Realme of Portugall: the which he would not doe, not with standing all the prayers and perswasions of his said friends, to whom he made this answer: That which I have sayd, I have sayd: & true it is, that Philip Hector Pinto hath not any right in the succession of this fromne: but inuading his speech tou and intruding upon the same in such fort as he hath done, with ching King out staying till the cause were lawfully and orderly heard and Phills his vdecided, he hath committed violence and tyrannie: and there- furpation of fore I for my part doe not acknowledge him for my king, but rather for a tyrant and vsurper. Whereupon his friends gane him to understand, that this would be a verie dangerous thing for him to maintaine : for (said they) they will leade you away into Castile bound hand and foote, and settered in iron: and the re wilthey make you languish away in misery, and in the end the re to die Without all hope ener to see Portugall againe. Whereun. to he answered: Little doth that trouble me, howbest that it be an extreme griefe unto mee to end my daies out of my deare countrey, and that (which worse is) in Castile: and 7 protest unto you, that although I doe against my will enter in the realm of Castile, yet shall not Castile ener enter Within me. And so as he persified in this fidelitie to his sountrie, and disanowing of Philip, by his commandement there was paylon given him, whereof this godly, grane, learned and excellent man died in the flower of his yeares.

Portugall.

The like misaduenture happened to Don Laurence Prior Don Laurence IR rong

general of the Camons Regulars of Saim Augustine, of the congregation of the bolie Crosse of Coimbre, who for bis singue. lar prudence and religion (where was b bee is not abise adorned) had three several times with great comendation & honor executed & discharge this charge. What shal we say touching the immane and brutish crueltie which he hath practifed in Portugall against an infinite number of other notable personages? namelie, against that most renerend Pather Frier Steuen Leyton of the order of Friers Preachers, the kinfman of the Duke de Aueyra, and of the Duke de Leyria, and of other Princes and great Lords, who was twife Provincial. - and thrife Vicar generall of his Order. And albein that all the world did admire the miraculous life of this wverthis man, yet because hee had tooth and naile (as the saying is) defended the right of his countrie, the faid Philip canfed him so bee taken and imprisoned, depriving him of his voyce active and paffine, and of the exercise of his Priest bood, Which weathe occasion of his death, through extreame griefe and forrow.

These things and manie others has bee committed against a great number of persons, both Regular and Ecclesiastical, whome to recken up uvere infinite. All those above mentioned, they have been either ill intreated, or else put to death by the commandement and order of his Maiestie, that is so Catholike: As as vuel knowne by true and manifest proofes, and by most cleare and enident coniestures. It may bee that one day you shall see touching this master a more ample and large historie then this same: which contained one his cruelties towards his neighbours, and yet not all of those neither. See an epistle which Anthonic King of Portugal sont unto Pope Gregoric the thirteenthos that name, in the yeare 1584.

Behold then how hee dispatcheth all his affaires, and in what manner hee dealeth with all the world. It was not long fince there was taken in the Citie of Leona packet of letters, written with his owne hand, and fent to the Constable of Castile, within the which were found certaine graines amongst the letters: and a certaine Gentleman suspecting somewhat, gaue of those graines to eate to manie living creatures, which all died immedistlie. Another like matter as this fame happened within a while after in the franke Countie of Burgoigne, in a certaine house where the Constable of Castile had lodged; after his departure from thence, a chamber-maide of the house founde a ball within a verie faire purse; within which ball shee thinking to have founde some great treasure, founde certaine graines, of which was made the same proofe and experience: and all those creatures that did eate thereof, died. This is that notable tyrant which doeth all that hee can doe, to the vttermost of his abilitie, and that dareth seeke to take away the To wit of st life of the most Christian Maiestie, and other Princes Queencof by such shamefull and abhominable meanes, as there England, ar is none but would shame to write them, saue Onelie Prince Man maister Hieronymo Franchi Conestagio., of whome wee rice Count haue formerlie spoken. For hee in the seuenth booke Fol 216.p.: of his historic saieth, that Philip did prize the life of 80000 due the Priour (that is to say, of Seigniour Don Anthonio kats promiking of Portugall) at fourescore thousand duckats, as by king Phi beeing a rebell and disturber of the publike peace and lipto kill De quietnetle. And so did hee handle another. Prince that was both his cousin germane, and cousin germane remoned, and so manie wayes of kinne vnto him, and so strict, ly allied vnto him in friendship and amitie, that they carried themselues each to other, as if they had bene each others father; yea, and as if they had bene but one person: and yet did hee vse him as if hee had bene a common theefe, a robber, a malefactor, and a man of no reckening nor estimation. And this horrible and abhominable cruekie doeth not end in Portugall, but it passeth ouer the sea, and the Pyrenean mountaines, into Fraunce, and into England; where he hath bent and imployed all his meanes

Fryer Steuen

O barbarous, Oabhominable harg-man and murtherer!

:Genel 4.

hast thou no shame? If thou be a Catholike, as thou does entitle thy selfe, how is it, that thou knowest not what a decde of shame and enormitie it is to commit murther? God would not that any man should touch Caine himselfe. who had murthered his owne brother: and commanded that if any were so hardy as to kill him, that he should bee feuerely punished: Omnis qui occio crit Caine, septuplum punietur, Whosoeuer shall kill Caine, shall be punished seuen fold. If thou doe know this, why doest thou not keepe the commandements of God eternall? The good workes (I fay not of Saints, nor of Christians) but euen of Idolaters which having no knowledge of the true light, doe follow onely the simple law of Nature, doe they not worke any shame in thee? Doest thou not remember what the Romanes did when Pyrrhus his Physitian did offer Fabricius to poylon him? And how they handled the Schoole-maister to the children of the Fuliscians, which came to betray to them to Camillus? If thou thinke that these Examples bee nothing to the purpose, learne what sentence they gave a. gainst Seruslins Capio, who returning to Rome with victorie, and demanding that he may triumph, in recompence of his feruice done to the commonwealth, by the death of Viriatus (whom he had caused to be slaine by treason) and for that he had subdued a great part of Spaine to the Romane Empire: they pronounced this judgement against him; that both the faid Capio, and the murtherers of Viriatus were more worthy to be chastised then to be recompenced:

Pyrrhus. Fabritius.

Lucius Florus Pompo.Mela. Lucas Tudenfis, Paulus € = firus, and mamy others.

> mio indicati. By this then that hath beene said, may bee seene; as in a mirrour, the crueltie of this maligne and peruerle tyrant, axodw and that there was no reason they should allow any reward for the destroying of their enemies, and the victories gotten against them by money and through corruption. Qua victoria empta erat a Senatu, & percuffores indigni pra-whome many will not believe to bee such a one as in very deede and in trueth he is: but contrariewise, without all confideration, as people blinded, peruerse, and obstinate, they will striue and contend to gratifie him, be it well or ill done. And that which doth make me most out of patience in this behalfe is to fee and heare some who moued with an indifcreet zeale: or els being wickedly enclined, and (it may bee) guided and seduced by the diuell, doe hold any man whomsoever a most lewd and vile man, and in manner of an heretike, who being drawne by a true and just zeale, shall publish this much for a trueth and certaintie: in so much. that whether it be for feare or for gaine or for hatred, or of a' disordinate loue and charitie, they doe esteeme it a farre worfer deede to accuse and to reprove such open & knowne iniquities, then the very act of doing them. All of you in a manner will confesse and can not denie, but that all this which hath bene spoken touching the malice of this tyrant is most true and certaine: and yet neverthelesse, they thom. felues will not for all that flick to fay, that not with standing it be so, yet it is ill done, so to report of a Prince, that is so great a Catholike. See, I pray you, what a blindnesse, and how strange a matter this is, most ynworthie and vnbeseeming any man, that would bee counted either a Christian, or a just and honest man. If it beetrue and Nefarism eff publikely knowne, wherefore then doe you contradict & maleficum it, even against your owne conscience, and to the hurt cognition veand detriment of others? Doe you not knowe, that it is sitatem dama most wicked and cursed thing, and a manifest sinfull lt is as the sin crime to condemne the knowne and notorious truth? of witcheraft. and especially in such thinges, which by the commander to condemne ment of God; and in holic and pure religion we are boun- the knowne den to reproue and reprehend? But you will say vnto me; Obiectionsor that there is reason Princes should bee exceled in some allegations of faultes, when they are otherwise endowed with any no- reasons to intable and excellent vertues. And that there did never fife or exreigne in Spaine any Prince, which hath given better triall, cufe K. Philip.

nor made such euident demonstration of him selfe to bee a good Catholike, as his Catholike Maiestie, of whome now wee are in question. There is no Prince that hath so much enlarged, and augmented the Catholike faith as hee. There was neuer any that did vse the Clergie, and all, both Ecclesiasticall and Regular persons with greater loue, nor greater reuerence. And in briefe, there is not any hath builded more Monasteries, nor edified so many Churches, nor exercifed so great bountie and liberalitie towards the Church as he hath done; for besides the great and excessive costs and expences which hee hath bene at in building them. hee hath founded them with most great and rich rents and revenues, and hath honoured them with most ample and beneficiall priviledges. This is well faid. Belecue me my maisters, I am infinitely forrie, that I may not briefely aunswer to these propositions, for that euerie one of them doeth require a more ample treatise then this worke which wee have in hand: neverthelesse, I will not leave by the way (as it were) to say something touching the same, and to shewe you how you doe abuse re former ob- your selues in all these matters. And first, to aunswer to the former of your allegations; I confesse that you say nothing but reason: when a Prince shalbe a good Catholifte, just, honest, and valiant, without being liberall: it is great reason he should be pardoned of this defect; and so doe I thinke also, when any of those vertues shalbe wanting in a Prince, which are convenient and fit for the royall person and dignitie: so as not withstanding he be furnished and adorned with the residue. Howbeit I doe not forget what the commaundement of God is, touching this point: 20.2.7.10. Quicunque totam legem seruauerit, in uno autem offenderit. factus of omnium rens: who so ever shall keepe the whole law, and yet faileth in one point, he is guiltie of all. But I speake now as touching man, and in respect of men onely. and not of God: and I am of this opinion, that if a Prince pe ctions, or algations.

be touched with some notable vice: as if he be vniust, or eruell, or atyrant, or an ill or loose liver, &c. yet being accompanied and furnished with other vertues, we ought not neuerthelesse, for any one of those vices about mentioned. (how great and haynous so ever it be) neither · to revolt from him, nor yet to to complot or conspire 2gainst him, as to procure his ruine and destruction (for asmuch as in feeking his ruine, we shall sooner finde our own, which Fraunce hath well produced of to her cost.) But we are bound to have our recourse to God, by hartie prayer, fasting, and abstinence, and to pray to his divine Maiestie, to Good at turne his mercie toward him, and to pardon him, and to wholeton give him grace and vinderstanding to avoide that which is counsel so enilliand indgement and wisedoome, to choose that which demeans is good: that hee would give him a contrite and humble wards the heart; and would deale with him according to his mercies, Princes. to the intent the sweete smelling facrifice may ascend up to heaven, and that of his clemencie it would please him to receiue his prayers and oblations made vnto his divine Maieflie. By fuch meanes did the people of Loraine obtaine by the mercie and fauour of God so much grace for their Duke Therrs, the sonne of William, the brother of Godfrey and Baldwin Kings of Ierusalem, a most cruell and tyrannicall • Prince, & one that was a perfecuter of the Church of God, and an oppresser of his subjects and vassals, in so much as he did not only come to himselfe and amended his wicked life, (but also restoring that which he had wrongfully taken)he withdrew & shut himselfe vp in a Monasterie, where by the foace of foure yeares before his death, he led a perfect & holy life. O that it would please God, that your great friend Philip the Catholike (in whom are wanting all the vertues which are fit and decent for a good and iust Prince) would doe the like, and would restore vnto others, the goods & liuings taken from them, after the example of Duke Thierri, and not as did Charles the fift his father. And let this suffice for an aunswer to the first proposition alledged by you. b 3

As touching the second: true it is, that Philip hath greatly aduaunced the Christian faith in the West Indies: in so much that this doeth serue him greatly as a cloake or mantle to couer, and to augment his viurped power and tyrannie: but this good worke ought to bee imputed to fuch denout and religious persons, both of his. fabiects and others, as have bene the instruments thereof, rather then to him. See, I pray you, and consider well, how hee hath extended Religion in Affrique: hee hath even of late, against the institutions of the order of the Knights of the Religion of Islan Christ, and others, concluded and made peace in Barbarie with the Infidels. to the intent hee might with the more commoditie make warre in Europe against the Christians. And what doeth hee at this day against the Turke, but onely dallie and trifle with him?

Touching the third of your propositions: histories doe well recount, and all men may affure themselves, how much hee loueth the Ecclesiastical persons, and what reuerence hee beareth to them that are religious. In times past, it was never seene, that any Ecclesiastical or religious person hath beene put to death in Spaine, for any matters concerning the estate. The greatest crueltie, and most rigorous seuere instice, that the Arrian Princes. shewed vppon them for being contrarie to their opinions. was to imprison them, and to keepe them enclosed within Monasteries. True it is, that of some of them they did put out the eyes, and afterwards, some Princes did cause them to be put to death secretly in prison: but as for the gallowes, and such like infamous deaths, they knew not what it meant, faue onely fince the reigne of his Maiestie, that will be held for so great and so good a Catholike. And I for my part do belieue, that he is no less : and yet I know he is but a very bad Christian: for I make no doubt but he beleeueth all that which the holy Catholike, Apostolike Romane Church our mother teacheth, and instructeth

s:howbeit I know full well that he doth not observe any

If the precepts commanded in the Decalogue.

And as concerning the rest of your allegations made in his excuse; although that Philip hath builded up a great *mmber of Monasteries, and many Churches, endowing them with rich reuenues, yet all this will not make me, but that I mult needes take him and acknowledge him for a notable tyrant, and a most cruell Prince. Historiographers haue written largely of the cruelty of Brunhault, "(how. Brunhault. beit, that some would excuse her, and doe attribute this kings of France fault vnto the first Writers) and they doe a firme, that shee to be put to caused to be put to death ten seuerall Kings in France, and death. many other persons of great quality. Also they write of her that shee caused a great number of Churches to be builded, and did prouide them of fo great goods and riches, that it is a very frange thing to be reported. See what Gagnin Gaguin. writeth thereof: in so much, that if a manwould compare the charge and expences of Brunbault, with the meanes fhee had, he would greatly maruell, how this woman was able in one age to build so many Temples, and assigne vnto them also so good and large revenues. Now Brunhault hath deferued another manner of praise and commendation, for vsing so great liberality towards the Church, then doth Philip, because shee gave of her owne, and Philip giveth of other mens. In Spaine they finde great fault with those that will steale a sheepe, and will give the feete for Gods sake: and fo doth his Catholike Maiesty, hee draweth from the Clergy Fertias, Subsidio, Pila, Escusado: in so much, that of See the meaten hetaketh at the least fine: and one Prelate payeth more words a little vnto him then 2000 labourers, or 4000 Gentlemen. See after. then how liberall he is to the Clergy: and by the meanes of these feete of his sheepe, hee buildeth vp Monasteries and other Churches, and endoweth them with great revenues. Moreover, who is he that hath medled with ferting to fale the Townes and Castles which were of the iurisdiction and valials of the Church? It is your great friend Philip.

- whom you accompt so vertuous and so Catholike.

The Translator.

Tercial, is the third part of the rent which a Prelate receiweth yeerely out of his Benefice or Spiritual lining.

Subsidio: is an energlus and certaine summe which he payeth out of the two third parts which remaine, and of other resembles appertaining to bis estate.

Pila: is that summe, which be taketh of all the Parish Churches in Spaine: namely of enery Parishioner, that is, of them that are of any wealth, he taketh the tithes or tenth part. And some of the regular persons, who doe possesse any heritages in the same Parish, doe helpe to pay this tribute after the rate. The Regulars themselves doe pay tithe also of all that which they possesses to the Cardens.

Escusado: is a certaine summe which the Clergy, both Ecclesiastical and Regular persons, because they may not beare armes, doe pay unto the King Catbolike, to be excused in that behalfe.

Obiection.

I know well, you will reply vnto me, and alledge, that the rents of the Churches of Spaine are so great and excelfine, that although the Prelates doc pay vnto their King the one halfe of them, yet they doe all of them still continue and remaine rich; because there be some Prelates in Spaine. which have greater revenues yeerely then 50 or 60 Prelats in France. Hereunto I answer: that although it be fo ver his Catholike Maielly may not spoile the Church of her goods, which Princes, and others Catholike and denour persons have given vnto her. And if the dowry of any Da. molell or maiden be priviledged, how much more ought that so to be, which is given to God, and to our Lady, and to the Saints: who(as Histories doe specifie)haue foughten visibly and really, and have beene seene in sundry battels personally, doing of great miracles? And therefore seeing that his Catholike Maiesty doth take away from the Chur ches that which is given them, for the causes and reasons by vs alledged, he committeeth fraud and lacriledge, which may be an occasion, that hee himselfe may happen ere he die, or his successors for him to repay the same againe. For this cause did Nebuchadnezzar wander vp and downe for ma- Daniel 4. my yeares in the fields in the shape of a brute beast: and Balshazar his some saw that horrible vision of a hand writing Daniel 5, vpon a wall his future death and destruction. Ananias and Acts sa Saphira his wife fell downe dead at the feete of Saint Peter. We have many examples touching this matter in the holy Scriptures, and many more in prophane Writers: and there is a great number of them even in Spaine, especially in Castile. The Queene Dame Viraca, the Daughter of Alphon-fue the fixt Emperour, going out of the Church of S. Isidore Histories of with the riches which shee had taken thence, fell downe Spaine, dead at the Church doore. Don Alphonsus the warriour her Husband, for the like matter was vanquished by the Moores in the battell of Fraga, and was never more seene nor heard of after that time, neither aline nor dead. The King Don Henry brother germane to the mother of Saint Lewes, being but a ladde, was slaine by the hazard of a brick or tile falling vpon him within Placentia. Some doe attribute this his death to the carelesnesse of the said Henry, for not prouiding a remedy (albeit hee were in his tender and younger yeeres,) against the extortions done upon the Churches, by the children of the Count Don Nugno de Lara, who were Tutors to the said Henry, and Gouernours of his Realme: and they doe affirme, that all those disasters and mishaps which Histories doe write of, did happen by the occasion of those his Tutors. These examples may suffice to proue vnto you the abuse and inualidity of your reply, and to shew that your Philip by laying of his hands typon the Ecclesiasticall liuings, (as he hath done) cannot excuse himselse of fraud, sacriledge, and tyranny; and so by this meanes (with an ill conscience) hee stealeth the.

Anlwer.

the sheepe of another man, notwithstanding that hee give againe the feete for God fake. And yet ouer and about all this, I doe assure you even in the faith of an honest man that if there were no other vices in the person of King Philip faue onely these two, to wit, tyranny and cruelty, and if hee were a true observer of the rest of the Law and faith Carbolike. I would excuse you of your blindnesse and inveiele. ment: but you may hold this for a certainty, that his abhominable workes will proue any man whomtoeuer to be an egregious lyer, that shall be so hardy as to detend that hee is no fuch manner of man. For this enemy and generall persecuter, under the cloake and shadow of a Catholike, hath done more mischiefe, and committed more infolencies 2. gainst the Church of Rome, then all the other perfecuters that cuer went before him. Will you see the proofe how you are abused, and how bad and vile a Christian hee is ? Open your eye liddes, and you shall see how he bewraveth ir even as if a man should with his finger point at it. In the yeere 1575, this King Catholike being aduertised that the late Monsieur did make great preparation to enter with a mighty Army into Flaunders, hee beganne very fecretly to found certaine of the principall Lords and chiefe heads of the pretended reformed Religion, within the Prouinces of Languedoc, Foix, Bearne, Bigorre, and of the Countrey de la Bort, neere to Guipuscua, ouer against Fontaraby, to know if they would under his protection defend their liberty, promifing them, that he would cause an Army of Almaines to descend against the most Christian King, and that hee would give them five hundred thousand crownes yeerely to that effect, and for the entertainement of the Mi. nisters of their Churches: beating into their eares, and making them believe, that the enterprise of Flaunders, which the Duke of Alanion had undertaken, did not tend to any other end, but onely to entrap, and to make another mate. facre of them, as had lately beene done under the King. Charles the ninth his brother, when the Lord de la Noue was taken,

Offers made for King Philip to those of the reformed Religion, to make warre against the late French King, eaken, and the Lord de Iney was put to death betweene two Tables, with many other Lords and Gentlemen. He had the better meanes and opportunity to treat with the faid Churches, by reason there were many Catholikes mingled amonglithe Huguenots: all of which did governe, and demeane themselves according to the conventions and agreements made betweene them: and a great Lord of France. and the Lord Mountieur de Chastillion, howbeit that af-- terwards this vnion was broken. Some of their chiefe heads did give eare vnto those perswasios of Philip, insomuch that there were great preparations made for a strong & mighty warre against them, which succeeded not long after, when Bronage was taken. Besides, the said Lords and heads of the reformed Religion, with some of their Ministers, being entred into a great icalousie of the most Christian King now raigning, (who was then King of Nauarre) and of the late Monsieur the Prince of Condy, they resolved secretly within the Towne of Montanban, to call in Arangers of their Religion to be their Protectours and defenders. And to that effect, they sent one of their Ministers into Almaine, seining that they fent him vnto the pretended reformed Church of Metz. Notwithstanding the matter was discouered by one of the principall Lords, newly drawne to be of their Religion, who had taken great indignation against a Minister of his owne, and because hee had been an assistant at the same Councell, he thought he had beene of the same minde also: and did therefore reproue him, faying: that he greatly maruelled how he could suffer such a quill to be thrust through his nose, without laughing at it. But the Minister excused himselfe, assuring him that he knew nothing of that matter. But that was an occasion, that the practise brake off: befides, that they were not well agreed amongst themselves, whom they should choose to bee their chiefe and prote-Ctour: some of them desired the Duke Casimier: others would have England: and some others the Duke of Sauoy: who all that time did not know any thing at all of that which which passed betweene him and the Ministers. But after that, at fuch time as the young Duke (now presently ruling)came to succeed his Father, he being aduertised thereof, sent vnto the King of Nauarre, to demaund the Lady his fifter for his wife: one named Scruin was dispatched as the messenger to that essect, and after him a Viscount; who feeing great difficulty in the demaund, went by Bearne into Spaine, where he treated the mariage of the Infant D. Ka. therine, at this day Dutchesse of Sauoy: which mariage Don Amadis the bastard brother of the said Duke afterwards effected. This mariage came well to purpose for Thilip, because by this meanes hee assured himselfe of the Duke, that he should attempt nothing in Portugall: where he knew full well, that after the death of King Henry, there was great division amongst the Portugals, for that some would have had the Lady Katherine Dutchelle of Bragancia: others the Lord Don Anthonio: and in a manner all well neere not liking to have any of those which were named would have had the faid Duke of Sauoy, being the Graund-childe of a Daughter of Portugall, who(as the report is) if hee had gone thither during the inter-raigne in Portugall, at the time of that dissention, and by reason of their vnwillingnetle to admit the one or the other of those aboue named, he had without doubt beene received of all the Portugals.

To proceede, and to shew you yet more plainely what manner of man this is, for whose love you doe even seeke your owne destruction, and in whose service you are so forward and so diligent: I will adde here somewhat more touching this matter, for it is not possible to veter all that may be spoken to that effect. It is not long since, that for to follow the steppes of some other good and godly Catholikes as himielse is, he rendered the City of Arzile to Muley Hames King of Marocco, against the will and liking of the Portugals which did inhabit it, who had bound themselves without his aide to desend it. It was supposed by all the Christians, that Philip surrendered the City, because hee was affured that hee should not be able to defend it against the puissance of Infidels, for so did he himselfe cause it to be given out, saying: That it was a lesse muschiese to The real render it without hazarding the lines and goods of the In- why Phil habitants, then by keeping it, to put them all in daunger. rendred t But therein hee abused them most maliciously, for the true City of A cause why this good Catholike rendered this City of Chri-met. stians vnto the Moores, was because he had promised it vnto their King, vpon condition he should not lend two hundred thousand Crownes to Don Anthonio his cousin german, King of Portugall, The which summe the Moore had before promised to lend him at the intercession of England: and for this reason had the said Don Anthonio sent his sonne Bon Christopher to Marocco to be there in hostage for the faid fumme of money, who remained there by the space of foure yeeres. You see now what a good and Catholike Christian deede this man did, whom you doe so desend for a most singular Christian and Catholike, who to hinder a King, a farre better Catholike then himselfe, from recovering of his owne, doth not onely tyrannically detaine anothers right, but doth make it away from Christians, to give it vnto Infidels. What answer doe you make hereunto? I make your felues the Judges: wherefore then will you not acknowledge the irreligion of this man, to whom you are so affectionate, and the great malice and peruersenesse of him, whom you love fo well? Confider and know, that you are taken and bound with a groffe chaine: and that abiffus Pfalme 41 shiffum invocat: One depth calleth another. And I say to you, one fault draweth on an hundred thousand after it. Of the maintaining and defending of an euill and wicked man, ensueth commonly a finister and peruerse indgement of them which are good. This was well seene to be true and verified in the life time of Don Anthome, and is yet still even at this day. It is a shame to heare the abhominations which the fauourers of this pretended pretended King Catholike have heretofore spoken and giuen out, and doe not yet cease to speake of this poore Prince deceased. Some call him rebell, others terme him a runnigate, and a fugitive from place to place, and from Countrey to Countrey: and some others call him a seditious person. an enemy to Christendome, an Infidell, and an hereticke. Can there be any thing more grieuous, more sensible, more vniust, and more vnworthy of a Christian? How dare you (against all Lawes both divine and humane) handle and vse so ill, a Prince, the some of the greatest Prince of his age: the grand-child of that great Emanuel, from whom the Princes of Europe doe glory to draw their descent and originall: a Prince fore prefled and turmoyled with afflicti. ons, trouble and perplexity. He hath well shewed euen in his exile and banishment, that he was a better Catholike then your Philip his cousin: lesse ambitious, without choller, without hatred, and full of charity. For if he would have beene content to recouer his Realme of Portugall, with more honourable meanes then your tyrant hath tyrannized ouer it, and doth yet tyrannously detaine it, hee might well have done it. It he would have accorded, that the English should have had exercise of their Religion in Portugall, onely within their owne Houses and lodgings, the Earle of Leicester (whom some call the Count of Lest) would have vndertaken to set him againe in possession of his Realmes and Seigniories. In the yeere one thousand fine hundred eighty nine, when hee pailed into Portugall with the English, amongst other Articles of agreement made betweene them, there was no other thing granted nor yeelded vnto them, but onely a licence or liberty for them to live in Portugall, without being bound or compelled by the Ecclefiastical Prelates, to repaire to the Churches to the service and exercise of the Catholikes. And in the same manner, as the Queene of England did then entertaine the straungers Catholickes, inhabiting within her Realme of England: even so did bee accord and ordaine that the English

English should finde the like vsage and entertainement in Portugall. And it may be, that if he would have enlarged their libertie in this respects the English would again have enforced their aboade in that Countrey. But he proceeded so like a Catholicke with them, that they had a kinde of difrust and tooke occasion to suspect him. The king of Marocco at this day now raigning, (of whom wee have lately spoken) sent an Embassadour into England, to intreat him. touching the deliuering of Portugall from her tyranny: offering him to make present payment of 100 thousand Crownes at London, for the prouyding of 100 sayle of shipps to passe into Barbary, from whence he promised to embarke, and to patte with him in person, and also to set at liberty about seuen or eight thousand Portugalls, whom he held in captility, and which were good fouldiers, and with them and the principall horse of Barbary, to take land and fet foote in Spaine, and to put him in possession of his Realme: But Don Anthonio would not accept those his offers, because hee would give no occasion to the Moores, (namely those Moores that are baptized and line as Chri-The cause w stians in Arragon, Valentia, Murcia, and other quarters of Don Antho Spaine; where the Moore did assure himselfe to finde 60 nio refused 1 thousand men at his denotion) there to rebell, and to worke meanes to re the miscry and calamity of the Christians. This was a more Realme. daungerous matter, and would have beene more burthensome and chargeable to King Philip, then to the King Don Anthonio, with whome Muley Hamet defired to have made a peace very beneficiall and advantageous to the Realmes of Portugall: but Don Anthonio refused all, onely mooued thereunto of a godly Catholicke zeale. Now shew me (my Malters) where or when your Don Philip ever did as much: He hath made great promises to Don Anthonio, to the intent he might cause him to renounce his right, which he had in Portugall, by reason of his election. He offered to make him Viceroy of Naples, with 400 thousand Crownes of Offers of k yearely rent, and the collation of the officers and benefices Philip to I

oineeliaA Ro

of that kingdome. Moreguer he would have given him 500 thousand Crownes to pay his debts, and to defray the charge of going to take that Gouernement vpon him: And that hee would bee bound to restore all those Portugals to their former estates, whose goods he had taken and confiscated for following of his partie. And that hee would advaunce and recompence such as did serve and attend him actually: and that he would pardon all in generall. Whereunto Don Anthonio made him this aunswer: God defend that he should commit so great a fault: and that he had rather die in an hospitall, then to doc a thing so hainous, wicked, vniust, and against his conscience, for that the lawes had toght him thus much, that he might not contract for that which appertained to another. For, when he was chosen at Sautaren, he had then sworne, and afterwards againe at Lisbon (when he was confirmed King by the deputies of the cities and townes of Portugall, which came thither to take their outh for their allegeance, and to doehim homage) that he should neuer accord nor fall to any agreement with the enemy, without leaning Portugall in her full and perfect libertie. This may serue to shew how much better a Catholike, and how lesse ambitious the King Don Anthonio was then King Philip. And as tonching his choller and his hatred or charitie, that may ap_ peare by this which followeth, in that there have beene many men who have oftentimes offered to Don Anthonio to kill Philip: neuerthelesse he would neuer give them any Most christian entertainment, alledging that Kings are the announted of the Lord: and although (quoth he) my cousin King Philip blinded by ambition and tyrannie, do perfecute me, and do seeke to take my life from me, yet will not I be content nor consent for all that, that any man for the love of me, should > attempt to take his life. And who foeuer shall dare or aduenture to do it, let him looke to himselfe that he come not into my hands. For though his fins do fo blind and bewirch him, as that they make him shew himselfe a Saul against me nio full of sonscience.

Don Antho-

peaches of 5. Anthonio.

yet I for my part do protest before God, to shew my selfe a David towards him. A certaine man on a day demaunding of him a fauour for the good newes which hee brought him (for he had affored him that King Philip was dead) he aunfwered him halfe in choller; My good friend, doest thou not know who it is of whom thou speakest vnto me? hee is my cousin germane, bring me newes that I have eight or ten thousand faithfull men, and well armed with good and sage Captaines, and all things necessary to restore Portugall to libertie, and I promise thee in the word of an honest man, to make thee so rich and so honourable in my Realme, as no Gentleman shall go beyond thee: go, go, learne to know the disposition of Princes Now my masters, what thinke you of these examples? do you now see what reason I haue to say, that the King Don Anthonio was more Catholike, and lesse ambitious then the king Philip, & that he was a man without choller & hatred, but contrary wife full of charity? I pray you therefore for the love of God, that from henceforth you would resolue your selues, with a sound and vncorrupted judgement, & a pure conscience, and without any inneigle. ment or indifcreet zeale, to embrace the good, and to reject the euill. If he be dishonest, luxurious & licentious, I say nothing in that behalfe: for that is not the butt or ende of our treatife: and I beleeve, that the Prince of Orange in his Apologie, hath faid fomething touching that marter: and the infamous rumour and detestable report which hath runne. and doth yet runne throughout the world, doeth fay much , to that effect. God give him the grace to know himselfe, and to convert, and to render to enery man his owne before his death, better then he hath restored that which (as is reported) his father at the hower of his death commaunded him to render and to restore againe.

Now, most humbly I beseech your Maiesties to hold me excused, for having beene so large in this matter: because I have not done it without good cause, knowing that to come to the butte and end of my purpose, it was very needfull.

and did much import me, to have sayd that which I have done. This is a thing proper and conformable to the law of God, and agreeable to the nature of charitie, to bring them into the right way, that wander and goe astray, and to difcharge and cleare the innocent, though it bee to the dammage and displeasure of the wicked.

Most excellent Princes,

If the reasons which I have alleadged, and the histories which I have quoted, bee not sufficient to perswade you. and to vrge you speedily with one accord, and consent to make a good and gallant army, and to fend it into Spaine, not onely to make prefent resistance against the force of the Castillian, to breake the course of his defleignes, to beate downe his pride, and to ruinate his puissance: but also to bridle him in the time to come, I shall be enforced to beleeue, that God hath for saken and abandoned you, because of your finnes, both publick and particular: and that he hath deprived you of all judgement, and understanding, to the intent you should not see that which concerneth you so neate and which is aboue all thinges, most needefull and necessary for your lafety. In such fort that being fo inueigled, and (as it were) wholy amazed, you will come to fall into a bottom. leffe gulfe of most blinde darkenesse, and consequently into vtter dellruction and totall ruine: Conceiue (I beseech you) and comprehend that which I say vnto you, and consider it, intentiuely, for in that you have within these few years past contemned or neglected to make a voyage into Portugall, and have not vouchfafed to yeeld neither fuccour nor fanour vnto the Portugals your friends, you have therefore at this time in Fraunce the Castillians your enemies. From hencefoorth it shall be better for you and more expedient. that the warre be made in Spaine, and not in Fraunce: and you shall receive farre lesse discommoditie in destroying the territories of the Castillians with fire and sword, then to fee the townes and territories of your owne taken, wasted, and spoyled. sdT

The Translators encouragement to these most worthic Princes.

The inward affection which I have onto your Maiefies, the loyally Which I owe unto your fernices, and the defire Which - I have to see the angmentation of the good and prosperity of France: besides my age, and long experience in matters of estate, do give me the assurance and hardinesse to advertise, you by the way of something concerning the matter here spoken of by the Anthor. I had of late certaine intelligence by letters from some of my friends, that the King of Tartaria now raigning (Whome the auncient Historiographers and Cosmographers do call, Magnum Can, Regem regum, & Dominum dominantium, that is, The great Cham, King of Kings, and Lord of Lords) who is faid to be a most prudent, brane, ard warlike Prince, kath determined for the great denotion which he beareth to his great Prophet Mahomet (Whose sett he professeth) to paffe with great forces to Mecha in Arabia, and there so seal e upon the bodie of his said Prophet. This Sophie of Perfia being ascertained of this enterprise (whom the Anthone in this his treatise nameth Xatama) presently distratched away sertaine Embasadours to Confantinople, to the great Seignior of the Turkes, with whom for these manie yeares of late he hath had great warres, and continual emissie, to pray him that her Would some his forces With his, to the end they might both of them is yutly resist and withstand the puissance of the Tartarian, shewing him also the danger which both the one and the or ther of them might incurre to the loffe of their effaces, by baning to their neighbour an enemy fo suge and puissant. I would to God year Maiesties would new consider, that is the sconsiderations do fall into the understanding of a Barbarian, how much more ought they not to bee Wanting on men of indgement and underflanding: and I Would your Maiefises would pender advisedly, bow minch it importeth you not to juffer the greatnesse of the Caffolian your next and nearest neighbour. Toyne your forces with your Confederates, and take in hand this suterprise, in fach fore as you may devide the power and monarchie of the enemie, I doe not say that you should send to pill & ransacke them which are under the yoke and commaund of the enemie, God forbid: for this would turne as such to his good and profite, as to our burt and demage, because by our pilling and sacking of them, wee shall give them canse (who now have bim deadlie, and can not abide not onely him, nor so much as to heare him named) for the defence of themselves, and to bee revenged of their domages, and our extersions done upon them, to some themselnes with our enemie, and to serue him, with love and fidelitie: and contrarywise, to prosecute and pursue us with extreame batred, doing their worst that they may against us : in such fort, that wer losing our friends, who now defire to affift tos, shall purchase them for our enemies; and they will aspire nor seeke nothing more then our ruine and destruction. On the contrarie, in steed of mortall enemies which he hath now of them, shall finde them to be his friends to ayde and affist him, to the maintainance of his ambition and tyrannie. And this is shat which her doth seeke and desire, (shewing himselfe in the meane While like a mast wylie Foxe) and to this effect, be will not spare to give money liberally, because of the good that may redound thereof unto him. This is a thing most certaine, that hee desireth extreamly to see them made poors and ruinated whom he feareth, &c. I am fully persuaded that femer words then these will suffice, to give your Maiesties to unders Stand, how much it importeth you to preferre and defend peon ple that are malcontent and afflicted in miferie, and how much mischiefe may ensue by giving them cause of scandall and of fence. That which we oneht to doe in this case, is to travell by all meanes possible to set foot in Spaine, and to fortifie que selves. Within it, gathering and drawing unto us such as are feanda. tized and ill handled by the enemie , and to receive them with. bumenitie and curtefie : so did William the Conquerous earns the Realme of England; the Which also in the same manner Henrie the seventh did aftermards get likewise, e As any or thes bane done the like yea, and your Masefies also, what you food. [eiz.€ - 4 :

R

feize upon some places in Spaine, you shall make your owne peaco with honour, profite and advantage. This which I say, is not to contradict that which many defire, without considering what is expedient and necessarie to a matter of sogreat importance: but rather to shew, how your Maiesties may doe without any losse and detriment, and to the best prosit and advantage of your Realmes, year and of all the common wealt of Christendome . The boly King and Prophet Dauid, as a most politike and wise man, counselleth us to pray to God for those things which are needfull to the peace of ferusalem, that is, the Church militant, & consequently, wee are commanued to do if . Primo rogate que ad! pacem funt Ierufalem: Pray for the peace of ferufalem. ISED curdo, Flat pax Secondly, Let peace be (but the world shall nell ner have peace till Spaine be devided) in virtue tua. That is to Lay, in such fort, as we may not look one sote of our efface, honour, reputation and integritte, and other things of tike nature and qualitie, whereof I Will surcease to speake any further, because I Will not trouble the discourse of the Auchour.

And for my part, furely and in my conscience I amhalfe in a doubt whether I should laugh or weep at this so great and extreame a blindnette: neither more nor lefte then Ham! mball did seeing the destruction of Carthage. Wind if it bee well confidered, that this laughter proceedeth no but of the great griefe and forrow which I have at my heart, I beleene affuredly that it would bee to more purpose then all your teares, cries, and lamentations and will then say of yours Hanniball laid of the Carthagenians: Youweepe, you figh, and you lament to fee your townes taken y your contrictey rarifacked & spoyled, your children brethren, kinsfolkes countrimen and friends, flaine and killed, and your goods walked and loft you know all of you how to remedy it, and confess that you know it and yet there is none of you that will refolue, nor shew himselfe forward; for the publike & common good, as well as for the particular good of cuerie one: and there is none that either speaketh or talketh of it faying let vs free our countrey, let vs fuccour our friends.

friends, let va cast out and drive away our enemies: I will doethis or that, I will give thus much for the publike and common good of my countrie. Are you so straight laced for so small a matter, which should redeeme you, and set you altogether in peace, rest, and quietnesse? and which should deliner your friends, who will serve you as a rampier or bulwarke, and will cast your enemies out of your provinces, and will drive them into a corner, where they shall feare you more then they doe now scorne and contempeyou? I am fore afraide, that before many daies be past, you will confesse you wept hitherto but for trifles, in comparison of that which is to come. I pray God you doe not follow the steps of Antiochen, who seeing himselfe vanquished by the Romanes for want of following the counsell of Hamball, was greatlie altonished but all too late. And hee then esteemed Hauniball not onely sage and prodent. but also, even as a Prophet; for that he had foretold him all that which afterwards happened vnto him. Awake therfore I pray you, and confider well uppon that which I counselly ou for your good: and that he which doth adulfe you to it doeth defire it as your poore servitour and friend, who hath as great a care of your fafeties & preferuation, as of his owner and who hath often foretold, and (as it were). prophecied (as the principal counsellers of estate, both in-Fraunce & in England can well restifie) both all this which is come to passe in this behalfe, and hath also foreshewed all shat which bath beene lost in France, and to what end and iffue things will grow at the last, if there be not some better order taken in these affaires. And I bekeue, that if they were demanded the question, they will tell you how I have passed away my time with as great griefe and discon. tentment, as a man possibly might do, to see the enemy dain ly to prosper, and to waxe more proud and arrogant by your owne proper sufferance, consent, and wilfulneffe: & for this cause. I am in a manner wholly resolved, to leave and abandon the convertation of men, & to retire & withdraw my selfe into some solitary mountaine. Notwithstanding. because I know and am acquainted with all that hath befaine for these 50 yeares last past in the greatest part of Europe: I doe therefore tell you, as one that hath had experience of these matters, that as yet you may recover (if you will)all that which hitherto you have loft, and both deliner your friends and bridle your enemies. And you may take fuch order, that the time to come shall be more happy and fortunate vnto you, then the time already pall hath beene. And moreover, I doe assure you, that sithens the losse of great part of Christendome wonne by the Turke, the late losse of the most part of Germany, the hereditary possession of the King of Bohemia, all Switzerland, with the great hazard of losing all the Netherlands, who are now strining for breath against the King of Spaines mighty powers now in the field, (which I for my part doe thinke to have proceedod from shevery hand of God, as of your louing Father. who by a fatherly love doth challife you, to the end you should awaken; out of your fecurity and negligence I have beene ever fince refolued to fet downe, in writing, that which I have so often pronounced by word of mouth. to fo many persons of special marke and quality, before that ever they did entreat me thereunto. And this is the cause, that if this my writing doe not produce that publike good, and that effect which I desire. I protest that from henceforth I will for ever hold my peace and be filent. Neuerthelesse. I most humbly beseech your Christian Maiesties and all the Princes and Potentates of Europe, and all the great Lords and Officers of the Crownes of England and of Fraunce, that it would please you to descend into your sches, and at your leifure according to your accustomed prudence and wisdome, to consider that good fortune and felicity doth not confift to much in the conquest and subduing of great Seigniories and large dominions, for the time present, with an intent to leave the same to your successors: but rather to affire confirme, and preferre them for the time to come to your children and posterity: to the intent that when it fiall please God to tall you hence, they may quiet. ly and peaceably enjoy them in peace and manquility, while out any trouble, disquier, or hinderance. For it is a farte greater versue, to preferue and keepe that which is gotten, then to get and purchase new things daily.

10. Atthe minor ell virtus quant quartere, parem tuero

The poore Pilgrime beaten by Time, and pelecuted by Fortune.

of the Doct it months, all released, with they car કાર છે. તો તો સારત જાય હતું મહીન છે. જોતા પ્રાથમિક છે છે છે છે છે છે છે. તાર

I am resolved to make warre spon the Castillian: where. in if you also will be are a part, affire your felfe, you may ac. count me as one of your most faithfull and furest friends. But if you once grow to any termes of peace and amily with lain, then feeke you some other, with whom yo may deliberate upon that matter.

Br. Blogger radios estados amistos de la estados de dividos to the based in the confirmage distants in the first board as The second of the state of the second

AN

EXPLICATION

OF THE PILGRIME VPON

THE PROVERB: IF THE COCKE-

rell had not come, the Cock had not bene taken. And of the loyaltie of Auila and Simanchas in Castile: and of Celorico, and the Castellof Coimbre in Portugall.

Irem. What the diversitie is betweene the King of Castile and of Spaine:, and who they bee. whom wee call Castillians, and What is understood by Cities and

> Enry the fourth, King of Castile, (of whom wee have before spoken) being rel had no at the point of death, named foure come, the Executors of his Tellament, to go- Cock had derne the Realme after his death, and beene taker oro martie his daughter, the Ladie lane : two of which Executors (to wit) Don as que ti noque Aluaro de Estugniga Duke de Arewalor and Don Diego Lapez Pusheco Marquis de Ville_ naisciovning with the Archbishops of Toledos, named Don Alphonio Carrillo, Don Bergrand de la Cueua, Duke de Mbaquerke, the Maister of Calatrana : Don Rodriga Telles Giron Councie de Vregne : Don Iohn Telles Giron hif brother Marquille of Calis Don Alphonso de Afuller I land marie other great Lords with foureteene Cities of Caffile in fent unto Don Alphonfo the Affrican King of Portugall to praying him, that he would take 24:1713 to wife the faid Queene Dame Jane: the which the King of Portugall accepted, against the willes and good liking of many of his Realmes, who would not by any manner of meanes have to doe nor meddle with the Castillians. By reason of this mariage, in the yeere 1 47.5, Don Alphonso. went into the Lands and Countrey of his faid wife, where he had many encounters and combats with Fernand King of Arragon, the Husband of Habel the pretended Queene of Castile, and with his people, till such time as they encountered in the battell which was foughten neere the Ci-The battellof ty of Toro, in March 1476, which was ordered in this manner: the King Alphonso had made one Campe of the Lords and Nobles of the Realmes of Castile and Leon. with some Portugals: the Prince Don Juan his sonne, (who was come to the fuccours of his Father) had made another Campe of his Portugals, without any Castillians mingled amongst them: The King Fernand made also two campes. the one of the Castillians, which tooke his part and his wives: and the other of Arragonois, the Catalans, the Valencians, and such other peoples and Nations, as were the fubiects of his owne Realmes and Seigniories, whereof himselfe was Lord and commaunder. Fernandencountring with Alphonfo, defeated and ouercame him: and having taken his Guidon royall, made him forfake the field, and to betake himselfe to slight. But the Prince Don luan game in and charged to resolutely upon the Castillians, that he made them to flie, and having flaine many of them vpon the place. he tooke a great number of priloners; and himselfe remain ning whole and entire with his Forces, did with fingular hardinesse and magnanimity assaile Fordinard allo, the vanequisher of his Father, and making him to flie, did recover againe the Guydon royall, which the faid Alphonso his Father had loft The History of Portugall faith, that the Prince did great honour vnto a Knight which faued the faid Guydon, and gave him an vecrely sent on annuity of fine chouland Maranedis, & which was at that time to find re-oro.

nenne, irrcomparison of that it is at this pay) being about 12 duckats and a halfe, allowing 400 Marauedis to each duckat, and gratified him with fundey other gifts and great honours. Fernand wrote vnto Habel the successe of this battell, giving her to understand, that it the Prince had not come, the King his Father had beene taken. Whereupon he returned him this answer: that, if the Cockerell had not come, the Cocke had beene taken; and hereof came that prouerbe which wee told you Guaribay Setteth downe these last words, and confesseth the yeary truth. Neverthelesse, touching the residue of the History, he reporteth a thousand vntruths, which may be verified by the History which Damian de Goyes hath written of this Prince Don Damianus Franzin the which he faith, that the Prince would have kept Govern the and remained in the field where the battell was foughteff. life of the by the space of three dayes, if the Archbish p of Toledo Prince Do had not diffwaded him, who with great instance and ear- Iuan. nest entreaty caused him to retire into the City, because the weather was extreame cold, and his men were fore tranelled and wearied, and had been ouer-watched for want of fleepe. And he faid vnto him: Sir, your Highnesse hath kept the Field long enough, these three houres you have staied here, areas good as three dives, and one houre is as much as three. Some write that in memory of this victory, King Edward the fourth of England fent vnto this Prince the order of the Garter. And the Castillians had such ill successe continually against the Portugals, that (to grace themselves, because the King Alphonse was defeated and for sooke the field: (though his sonne held the field, and remained vanquisher) yet they shame not to attribute vnto themselves the honour and victory of this battell.

Alphonfus Raymond the onely some of Urrasa, the daughter of Alphonsu the sixt surnamed the Emperor, was borne in Auila, a City of Callile, and was nourifled and kept by Auila, them of the City, during the raigne of Alphonfus King of Aragon, called the waterious, together with his wife V rraca Onecue Queene of Castile, Mother of the said Raymond: Now there were great revolts and troubles in Castile, in the which they of Anila sollowing the party of Raymond against the said Alphonfus his Father in Law, did so much, that the Father in Law was dispossed of the government, and the home in Law was installed in the siege royall. And for this cause, this word hath passed for a common proverbe: The sidelity of Anila: and, Anila is for the King.

iimancas.

Touching Simancas, you are to understand, that in the yeere 1 463, Henrythe 4 raigning in Castile, at the perswafion of some of the Princes, many other Cities and Pownes did revolt from him, and grew into a rebellion, which they called, The league of the Princes: and they entituled them-. selues, Princes of the League. And in imitation hereof did Philip King of Castile, in the yeare 1 582, baptize the League, which hath beene the occasion of so many mifchiefes and afflictions, of which Fraunce hath especially tafled, and had experience for these nine yeeres last past. This is that League which hath wrought to great damage to the Church of Rome, and hath so ruinated and pulled it downe, as it shall neede many hundreds of yeeres to restore it againe. But to our matter: in procelle of time, the Souldiers of the Kings Army, being greatly augmented, and their puissance much increased, they came to the City of Toro: and the King having advertisement, that they of the League were issued out of Valladolid, and that having broken downe and razed the walles of Begnaffeur, they were gone to Simancas, he sent presently Iohn Hernandes Galiude his Captaine Generall, with 3000 Horses, for the succours of the Towne: which being entred into Simancas, were besieged by them of the League, who notwithstanding, were more afraid then those whom they had besieged. The Lackies within the Towne (who shewed themselves to be of a wonderfull good courage): having affembled themselves one day in a great number, and mocking those that had befieged them, did make a picture, which represented the Archbi-

Archbishop of Toledo; whom (because he was a Rebell against his King and Lord) they called Don Opas, the brother of the Count Iulian, who caused the Moores to enter into Spaine against the King Rodericke. After which, one of the Lackies being appointed for a Judge, fate himselfe Judgeme downe on the indgement feat, commanding the prisoner Lackies to be brought before him, (which was the picture of the gainst the Archbishop) and he gaue judgement upon him in this man. Archbish ner: For as much as Don Alphanso Carillo Archbishop of Toledo. Toledo, following the steppes of the Bishop Don Opas the Guar, lib destroyer of Spaine, hath beene a Traytor to his King and cap. 14. naturall Lord, rebelling against him with his places and Fortreffes, and with the money which he put into his hands to doe him service. For these causes, having seene and considered of his deserts by his triall, wherein hath appeared his wicked practifes, and felonious offences, we doe therefore condemne him to be burned; and that he be first trayled and drawne through the streetes and publike places of Simancas: and that in the execution thereof, the common cryer shall cry and proclaime with a loud voice: This is the julice commanded to be done, namely, that this cruell Don Osas shall be burne for his offence and trespasse; because having received divers places, fortresses, and monies of his King, hee hath notwithstanding revolted and rebelled again't him.

Quien tal haze, que t.el pague.
That is to lay,
So doe, so haue.

The judgement being pronounced: another Lackey taking the picture between his armes with an open cry, threw it forth of the Towne, having in his company more then three hundred Lackies, and immediately two of their company made a great fire to burne it, not farre from the campe of the enemy, who looked on whilest they were doing of it; and whilest the picture was in burning, all the Lackies together with open throat cryed and lang:

The second of th

The state of the s

was and a role for lawy in a SEE T. LEEUTE Dan Lineary THE REAL PROPERTY. WHEN THE HALL THERE ARE THE LI WENT THE ENGINEER AND COMMENTED or -- a -- a Councel see a Lyons: which the time that the late Anomy were from thence into To Jetters or Parses from the faid Innecess the The property Portugal, praying and requiring -- ... would obey and fabrait themselnes vito 200 St. 1900 voto him all the Cities, Townes, and Ca-Description : raine in generall. Neuerthelesse some special perferences were, who (notwithstanding the commanconstitute vope, or the force of Alphania) because they & post delat this did derogate from the loyalty which the ought visto their King, would not yeeld thereunto, but perfed themselnes against the faid diphonis, and won render vito him the Towner and Caffier which he commuted to their cuftor

Further Lord of any befored by Don there happened

Calletion de

the which he made a present to Don Alphanso with two fine white manchets, to the intent he might make him tebeue that hee was very well prouided of viduals, being he was not as yet without such delicates and dainties. In so much that the Governour Alphonso beleening that he had victuals fecretly conveyed vnto him, raised his siege and departed. This deuise was imputed to Formand Russ, as a notable point of fidelitie in the service of his Lord and maister: after whose death he did immediatly yeeld up the said towne to the said Alphonso, then elected and chosen King of Portugall (for that Sancho his brother had left no iffue behinde him) without any other accord or condition.

The faid Alphonisus for the same reason besieged the Ca- The Castle of stle of the citic of Coimbre, the Captaine whereof was called Martin de Freytas; who was brought to that necessitio, that both bread and water failed him, notwith Randing neither his owne wants, nor the great promises which Alphonfus made vnto his Captaine could draw him to render the Castle vnto him. Don Alphonso considering the loyalty and constancie of his Captaine, and being desirous to sauce his life, assoone as tydings were brought him that the King Sancho his brother was dead (who died during the fiege) he fent from his armie to the befreged, both bread, flesh, and other victuals necessarie for their sustenance: and hee wrote vnto the Captaine that the King Sanche was doed and buried in the towne of Toledo; and he promised to give him great honour and preferment, praying him that he would not any longer trouble himselfe, but render up the castle unto him, seeing now his King was deceased, and that he was chosen King by the Portugals, and had beene received and confirmed in the kingdome by the oth of fidelitie and allegeance throughout the realme. The Captaine seeing the letter, demanded of the King onely so long time of truce, 23 was needfull for him to go into Castile, and to see with his owne eyes, if that report were true or not: which the Kine.

King having graunted him, he tooke his journey; and comming to Toledo, caused the sepulchee of King Sanche to bee opened, and having taken good notice and knowledge of him, hee bound the keyes of the Castle to his right arme, of the which hee caused an act and record to be made by a publike Notarie, whom he had there of purpole to that effect: And so returning from thence into Portugall, he rendred the castle to the King Alphon-(w. The King in token of so rare a constancie and fidelitie, restored to him againe the keeping of the said castle, and gave him the place freely to him and to the heires of his bodie for euer, with this prerogative, that neither he, nor any of his posteritie, should bee bounden to doe homage for the same, either to himselfe or to the Kings his fuccessors. Freytas having kissed the Kingshand, and yeelded most humble thanks to his Maiestie for so great a fauour, did not onely refuse to accept of the Kings gift, but forbad his fonnes, and all the issue that should descend of him, vpon paine of his curse neuer to take charge, nor to vndertake the custodie and guard of any towne or cafile, for which they should bee bounden to doe scaltie and homage vnto any Prince what socuer. Thus you see, what is meant by Auila, Simancas, Colorico, & the castle of Coins. bre, all which are notable examples most worthy to be considered, and may bee a shame to many men in this our age, wherein they make so small account & reckening of a vertue so tare and commendable. My maisters, put your hands, I pray you, into your bosoms, and see how they are full of leprosie: returne and consider well with your selves, and acknowledge your faults, for God hath alwaies his cares open to heare them that keke vnto him for mercie.

The title of he King of Lastile, and f Spaine.

the yeare

Now as concerning the king of Castile, I would be very glad, that you would well understand & conceine what the meaning of this is, & whereof we have all eady spoken somewhat; & is at large handled in that booke which Frier Isseph Texere (a religious person of the order of S. Dominicke hath made made concerning the Genealogie of the most christian king: who is the very same person, that did preach, how we are bound to loue all men of what soeuer religion, sect or nation that they be even the Callilians themselves: which Monke beeing a Portugall (it may bee) doth not fully know how much the Spanish nation is agreeued to see and heare, that kin Philip should entitle himself king of Spaine (we speake nor meane not in this number the vulgar and rascall fort of Castilians, because they are perswaded that their king being so, they alone shall have all the rule & gouernment of the world.) For there bee divers other reasons besides those which he alledgeth, which are of no small importance to let you know: that as they of Arragon & Nauarce are not altozether out of hope to see themselves yet one day delivered from the tyrant (which may be also said of Portugall.) so they have a desire likewise to preserve their monarchies entire, that is to say, the priviledges, preheminences, prerogatiues, dignities, offices, customes, & laguage of their realmes: & it may be, that God of his divine goodnes & mercy will permit one day, that there shalbe raised up some Meses for the restoring of them to their liberty, for so also some have written touching the children of Israell; that after their entry into Egipt, they did continually keep 3 things especially vncorrupted & in their first integrity: to wit, their language. which was the Hebrew tongue, one selfe same fashion of apparelling themselues, and the proprietie of the surnames of their Families. And in case his Christian Maiesty would refolue to draw & deliuer that realme of Nauarre from the tyranny of the Gastilian, hee should finde a Constable & all other officers of the faid realme, who would affift him, & doe their vttermost endeauors to serve him faithfully: to the intent they might remaine in their countrey with their charges & offices, under the obeitfance of a naturall king, & not of a Castilian. And if the most excellent Duke of Lorraine. were disposed to restore, Arragon, Valentia, Catalonia, &c. he should have an Admirall, & many officers of those realms to accompany him: & they would hold & esteeme theselnes for most happy & fortunate, to deliuer their cuntry fro the tyranny & yoak of a stranger, & to redeliuer it to a naturall & lawfull Prince. If the Portugals likewise would determine and resolue themselves to choose by election (as they have right fo to doe) some Prince or some other of the people cither white, or negro (for it is most certaine, that to deliner themselues of the tyranny of Philip, they would be content to receive to their King the meanest negro of Guinee, if he be a Christian, and will live in the Realme with them) they are fully perswaded, and they have reason, that this would be a great help and furtherance to the accomplishment of their desires, to finde for their defence and preservation. Constable of Portugall, a Marshall, and Admirall, and all other such like officers of the Realme: and their records and writings done in their owne tongue, the fashions of their garments, and the furnames of their families. Contrary. wife if it be graunted and yeelded vnto Philip, that he may once take upon him this title of King of Spaine, it is most certaine and fure, that he will make onely one house royal of all Spaine, with a Constable, Marshall, or Marshals, and Admirall, graund Maister, great Chamberlaine, maister of the Horse, and all other such like officers of the Realme, all which shall be called of Spaine generally, and they will call themselves also by the name onely of Spaniards, and so will vnite all of them into one onely bodie, which will turne to the great dammage and prejudice of the particular states and kingdomes of Spaine, and to the great profit and furety of Philip and his policritie. Full little do strangers know of what importance this matter is: and thereof it commeth that they speake so fondly and foolishly when they talke thereof, which is a thing greatly to be blamed and reprehended in them: confidering that it is against the law which layth, that it is a great incivility for any man to jude of that which hee doth not understand. The nations of Spaine doe fee very well what mischiefe this may bring vpon incluile est de e incognita udicare, son them: and therefore they doe refift and with land it with so great force and vehemencie. The Castillian knoweth full well the great aduancement and affurance, which would hereof enfue to his estate, if he could reach so farre: and that is the cause, he is so earnest to get himselfe entitled king of Spaine. He is (as we have before fayd) very expert and well feene in histories, as his predecessors were also be_ fore him: and by reading of them he hath learned that this is the most easie meane and readie way to commaund peaceably, and to gaine the affection of all the Spaniards. Hiflories do shew vs., how Egbert a valiant and magnanimous Prince, being chosen king of the realme of West Saxons in West Saxon great Brittaine (which Realme contained the prouinces of in England; Cornewall, Deuon, Sommerkt, Wiltshire, Dorsetshire. Hampshire, and Barkeshire: and trusting upon his skill and knowledge in the art military, which hee had learned in Fra unce vnder Charlemaigne, where he had beene banished for many years, he resolued to make himselfe King & Lord of all great Brittaine, leaving Scotland apart. And beginning his enterprise, he first subdued the province of Wales, which is the strongest of all the rest. After which he wanne the Realmes of Kent, Mercia, Northumberland, and the Realme of the East Saxons, called Essex: having gotten this Orrather North Saxo prouince, and those four erealmes, Egbert seeing himselse in Norfalke now Lord of five, and that there now rested no more to conquer but the Realme of Suffex, so called of the South Saxons, and that of the East Saxons, called East Anglia of whose forces he made no great reckening. And bethinking with himselfe how he might assure and secure these dominions and Seigniories vnto himfelfe, he determined not onely to reote out and extinguish the name and memory of the Brittaines the ancient inhabitants of that Ile, but also gaine the good willes and affections of his subjects, by a new name, and so by that meanes to draw vnto himselfe the residue which remained yet vnconquered. To this effect and purpose he ordained and appointed, and by a perpetuall edia

Egbert the first king of Er gland.

١,

edict commaunded, that from that day forwards all those seuen Realmes should bee named by one onely name England: and that all the inhabitants should name themselues Englishmen. And by this meanes hee came readily and fully to the ende of his delire. In imitation of this Egbert, Fernand the second king of Arragon, and the fift of that name, king of Castile, seeing himselfe Lord of the greatell part of Spaine: and that there rested no more for him to gaine faue onely Nauarre and Portugall, he employed all his forces and endeauours to obtaine from the Princes realmes, and provinces of spaine, that which they refused, to wit, that hee might entitle and write himselfe King of Spaine. With the like ambition and desire, Philip his great graundchild, pretendeth that the Realmes of Spaine, and now of late Portugall haue constantly resolutely denied him, and which you doe give him fo readily and so liberally. So that now I thinke you will perfectly understand the cause wherefore Philip doeth write himselfe King of Castile and of Leon,&c. For so the narious of Sp_ine, and the Castilliansthemselues call him, how beit that you doe make a iest and toy of it, not knowing how much it doeth import them fo to do, and therefore I hope that from henceforth you will all those king- by these instructions both know your owne ignorance and correct this your fault and ouerlight.

and Casti's what it meaneth. New Caffile domes-which the kings of Castile haue getten from the Moores. names of the kingdomes of new Castile: & when they were recous. sed from the Moores. Toledo first fet t liberty an-2,1086.

Castillians ...

We call them Castilians, which are naturall and borne in the Realme of Castile, and in those Realmes which the kings of Castile (with the aide of the Kings of Nayarre, Ar-Theparticular ragon, and Portugall, & other Soueraigne Lords of Spaine) have gotten and wrested out of the hands and possession of the Moores: all which Realmes wee name by one onely name, new Castile. Of these Realmes, that which was the shortest time in the power and puissance of the Moores was the kingdome of Toledo, which was restored to libertieby Alphon(su the 6, called the Emperour, in the yeare 2086, having bin left vnto them, when Spaine was lost by King Roderick, in the yeare 714, so that by this account To ledo the chiefe and metropolitan City of Spaine, was in The reafer the possession of the insidels by the space of 372 yeares. wherefore ! For this cause the City of Braga in Portugall, Metropolitan ga entitleth of the Realme of Galicia, and having beene alwayes main- felfe Primate tained against the Moores by the Portugals, the Inhabitants thereof (who at the time when they builded it, were called Galli Bracchati) and where there have beene Bishops successively from the beginning of the primitive Church even till this time, did heretofore obtains the primacy of Spaine, and thee doth yet to entitle her telle, against the consent and liking of the Church of Toledo, which after it came to be reflored to her liberty, did againe begin to reuine and take her former title, and the Archbishops of those places doe yet at this day dispute and contend, whether of them should haue the preheminence.

lega/

Cordua was in the power of the Moores by the space of Cordua 3. 522 yeeres, for it was restored in the yeere 1236, the 29 of June, on the Feast of the Apostles S. Peter and S. Paul.

Murcia was in their possession by the space of 52 seveers. Murcia 2. For it was recouered in the yeere 1241, on which yeere Vniuerary c also the University of Salamanca was tounded.

Iaen was under the Moores 5 29 yeeres, and was reflored. in the yeere 1243.

Seuil having beene held by them for the space of $35 Seuil 5. veeres, was fet at liberty in the yeere 1 248.

Calis was under their commaund by the space of 555 Calis 6. yeeres, and was reestablished in the yeere 1 269, in the time of facob Aben fuceph King of Marocco.

Algizira having beene in their subjection for 630 yeeres, Algizina 7. was deliuered in the yeere 1344. For the recourry of this City, the people of the Realmes of Callile and of Leon, did grant and accord to give vnto the King Alphan fus the lufticier as long as the fiege should endure, the tribute which is called Alca vala: which is a shilling ypon the pound of all the Merchandize which should be sold. The which wibute Alphonsus most unjustly and ambitiously against the founded, An will of those peoples, did exact as long as he lived. In so much as the kings his successors have not onely ever since continued it, but they have also augmented it, and they make them pay at this day one vponten.

raltar.8.

Gibraltar, was held by the Moores for 748 yeares, and was recoursed in the yeare 1462.

lega.g.

Malega was under them 773 yeares, and was reconquered in the yeare 1487.

mada, 10.

Granada was regained in the yeare 1492, and was the last citie and realme taken from the Mores, who had en-ioyed it the space of 778.

This being knowne, it is no maruell, as I have written in this Treatile', that the Castilians are descended of the Mores and Iewes, (for these two peoples live mingled pell mell together) and that the pronunciation of their language is after the Morish fashion: seeing that the Mores have inhabited in that countries o many hundred of yeares, and doe yet at this present possesse and occupie a great pare of Castile.

iesthe ming reof.

Cities in Spaine, are those peoples wherein Bishops Seas are established. These bee also some cities which by particular priviledge (albeit they bee not Metropolitanes nor heads of Bishoprickes) doe vse this title and prerogatiue: howbeit there beevery few of them. Betweene a Citic and a Towne, there is a great difference, aswell in authoritie, as in prerogatives, honours and priviledges. In Cities there are commonly Corrigedores, specially in Portugall, who may be refembled to the Pretours and Goneral nours of the auncient Romanes, which governed the prominces. One citie hath many townes, peoples, and villages, which are subjects vnto it, as well in temporall as spirituall marrers. In such fort, that the civies are as the heads, and the townes as the members. For this cause when there happe. with any great affaires or common revolt in Spaine; the townes do alwayes follow the party of that city wheretune they are dependent. And to reduce any people into a civil die the antiquitie of the place is more required then the greatnesse of it. There be many Cities which are but meanely peopled, and Townes which are full and thicke of people. Valladolid, Medina del Campo, Madril, and Caceles in Castile, Santaren, Abrantes, Setunall, and Olinenea in Portugall, are very great Townes, and notably well peopled, and yet they surpasse in greatnesse many of the Cities: nemerthelesse, they are not for all that endowed with all these prerogatives, neither are they called Cities, Valladolid and Santaren are so full of people, that when in Spaine we make comparison of the greatnesse of Cities and of Townes, we fay; (indad par ciudad, Lisbona en Portugal: Villa par villa, Valladolid en Castilla: si quieres otra tal, busca Sentaren en Portugal, that is to fay: City for City, Lisbon in Portugall: Towne for Towne: Valladolid in Castile: if you will find any other the like, seeke Santaren in Portugall. It is not many yeeres fince that King Philip hath honoured the faid Valladolid Towne of Val'adolid with the title of a City, and hath made made a City it an Episcopall Sea: and that was, both because Valladolid and Bishops was wonderfull well peopled (as hath beene faid) as also Sea by K. Pl because it is one of the most noble and chiefest Townes of Castile, full of great and rich buildings, Churches, Monaste- King Philio ries, Colledges, principall Houses, and generall Studies: borne in Vi and also because his Maiesty was borne in that Towne the Isdolid. The 2 2 day of May 1 7 2 7, on a Tuelday about foure houres af- time of his n ter noone.

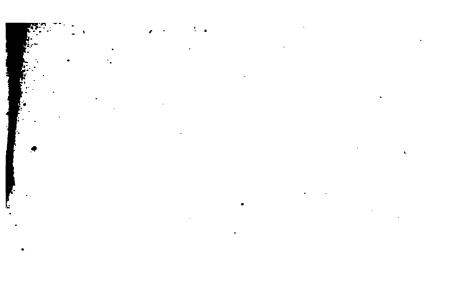

The Townes in Spaine are best peopled, which have Townes in within their limits and territories many Villages, hamlets, Spaine which and Houses, and have their surification limited and subie- they be. ched to the Cities. True it is that there be some Townes. which are the Heads of Baylite-wikes and gouernements. as in Portugall, the Towne of Santaren, of the which wee spake before, and the Towne of Tomar, which hath 42 Townes depending of her iurifdiction. These two Townes in Portugall doe precede and have the preheminence of the place before many Cities, in the publike Assemblies of the Estates of that Kingdome. The Towne of Santaren precedeth and goeth before 13 Cities, and is preceded onely of toure, to wit, Lisbon, Coimbre, Ebora, and Puerto, which in Latine is called Coustas Portugallensis. Santaren in the time of the Romanes was called Juhum Prasidium, and was a Court Royall, or (as they call it in Fraunce, a Court of Parliament) and was a Colonie of the Romanes. Tomar also at the same time was called Nabantia, and was an ancient City.

Now I suppose that I have sufficiently performed my promise, and satisfied your desire, and so fare you well.

FINIS.

.

.

